The most learned woman in the world is Miss Ramnabal, a young lady of 20, who is now in Paris. She is a native of India, and can read and write and talk in twelve languages, having a wonderful gift in that way, besides being up in mathematics, astronomy and history. She is studying medicine, and will go to India to practice, where she says thousands of her country-women die every year because they will not consult male physicians.

Sir Julius Benedict, the veteran English musician, now seventy-two years of age is as hale and hearty as he was when he came to America with Jenny Lind, a trip of which he is still fond of talking. He recently sat up composing music for forty hours without a moment's sleep or rest, and when at last the work in hand was finished, and Lady Benedict urged him to go to bed and rest, he gayly responded, "Yes, after I've read the evening papers."

Hamilton, Can., boasts of its number of giants. Here are examples: Emanuel Morton, 7 feet; William McCartney, 6 feet 7 inches; Police Constable Donald Smith, 6 feet 5 1-2 inches; Chief of Police Stewart, 6 feet 4 1-2 inches; George Sayers, 6 feet 4 inches; Alexander Harvey, 6 feet 4 inches; Police Constable Watson, 6 feet 3 inches; Police Contable Harris, 9 feet 2 inches; Police Constable Donald Campbell, 6 feet two inches; John Stuart, 6 feet 4 inches; chief Atchison (Fire Department,) 6 feet two inches. These giants can be seen in Hamilton every day.

Henry Van der Wyde, court photographer of the royal household of Great Britain, is a native of Rondout, N. Y. He was once the assistant of the late Professor Henry Draper. During the war he served with distinguished galantry in the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers. Afterward he went to England, and was soon sent for by the queen, and appointed royal photographer.

Dr. Corvisart, who recently died in Paris, was physician to Napaleon III. His uncle had been physician to the first Napoleon. Upon hearing of the defeat at Waterloo the elder Dr Corvisart was seized with an apoplectic attack, from which he never rallied. When the younger Corvisart heard of the death of the prince imperial he suffered a paralytic stroke, from which he never recovered, although he lingered until about a month ago.

A Physician writes: "I have recommended Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla in my practice as a general tonic. I consider it superior to every other preparation in cases of female complaints and general prostration. As a blood purifier it always acts like a charm, and as a true strengthener it has no equal."

"I'm all Afire."

From the Columbia Register, S. C.

Tuesday evening last the train going north on the Air Line railroad was boarded at Spartanburg by a young couple from the country, who took a place in the middle of the car, the lady sitting next the window. The train had been moving but a very few minutes when the lady suddenly jumped up and screamed, "My Lord! I'm all afire!" Both husband and wife "piled out" into the aisle, the lady with her dry goods at a prominent elevation and spanking and rubbing herself, assisted vigorously by her frightened husband. Every passenger in the car was aroused. One man called to the husband to wrap his overcoat around the lady; another passenger pulled the bell-cord and stopped the train. For a few minutes "pandemonium reigned supreme" in the car. Everybody was looking for fire and everybody saw everything but fire.

After the lady calmed down it came to light that she had been sitting with one foot upon the ledge through which the heating pipes run. The register immediately under being open she received a startling and unexpected hot blast, which surprised her and caused the confusion which followed. The man who wanted her saved with an overcoat is going into the salvage business. The man that stopped the train will never be known.

THE CONGRESS.

Wednesday, January, 31.

SENATE.—The bill providing for a centennial cotton and industrial exposition in 1884 passed.

Work on the tariff bill was resumed.

Pending the debate the hour arrived for the eulogies in memory of the late Congressman Orth, and Senator Harrison proceeded to address the senate. He made an eloquent review of the life and services of the late distinguished representative of Indiana, whose name, has been inseparately linked with the history of his state and the nation for the last forty years.

HOUSE.—Eulogies on the late Godlove S Orth, which began at 3 o'clock, interrupted the consideration of the tariff bill in the house to-day. In the three hours discussion, however, the temper of the house in regard to the pending bill was still further exemplified. It showed the disaffection among rebublicans on the question of tariff on many articles entering into common consumption.

There is undoubtedly quite a large element on the republican side for discriminating in favor of the great mass of consumers as against the capitalist and manufacturer. On the question of striking out the duty on quinine, twenty-four republicans voted with the democrats. Among these were Washburn and Kasson.

Thursday, February 1.

SENATE.—Mr. Ingalls presented a petition of citizens of Dakota against the divison of the territory and for its admission with its present boundaries.

Mr. Morrill offered a resolution suspending the operation of the law requiring the coinage of 2,000,000 silver dollars monthly. Work on the tariff bill was resumed.

HOUSE.—Nothing of special interest was done, the day being spent in consideration of the tariff bill.

The house made better progress with the bill than on any previous day, having nearly finished the chemical schedule.

Over eighty different items were passed, leaving ten more of that schedule to be considered.

There was a much better feeling between the two sides. There was also a less disposition to make speeches on the abstract question of the tariff, and a greater inclination to debate the merits of the separate items in the bill.

Friday, February 2.

SENATE.—Beyond the usual daily struggle with the tariff bill, nothing of note was done. The democrats adopted filibustering tactics and kept the senate in session until a late hour.

After several calls of the senate, each of which enclosed the absence of a quorum, Edmunds moved a resolution instructing the sergeant at arms to bring in the absentees. Morgan became red in the face as he spoke at great length in opposition to this abridgement of the personal liberty of senators. Other senators made points of order on the resolution and speeches on the points of order. No votes were had on amendment.

Tabor took the iron-clad oath, sat down and busied himself in tariff bills, reports and speeches preparatory to distinguishing himself before the term expires.

HOUSE.—After routine business and work on the tariff bill, Mr. Cannon reported the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, and said he would, next Monday, move to put it through under a suspension of the rules. Several members objected to voting away $20,000,000 in this summary manner.

During the consideration of the clause relating to the duty on varnishes, a lively scene took place between Mr. Aldrich of Illinois and Mr. Mills of Texas. Mr. Aldrich intimated that Mr. Mills lied. This ruffled Mills, and he reported angrily: "You utter a falsehood."

The colloquy produced intense excitement for a time and members rushed to that part of the hall occupied by the two antagonists. The friends of the two gentlemen finally succeeded in pacifying them, and Mr. Mills afterward publicly withdrew his remark.

Saturday, February 3.

SENATE.—The day was mostly spent on the tariff bill without decisive action.

HOUSE—The house spent four hours today discussing the proper duty to place on glass, and wound up by practically agreeing to all the recommendations of the ways and means committee.

Shortly after 3 o'clock the special order of the house, eulogies on the late Representative Lowe of Alabama, was declared in order, and the tariff bill was accordingly laid aside for the day.

Prior to this, however, a resolution instructing the naval committee to investigate the causes which led to the recent trouble in the Annapolis school, was referred to the proper committee, despite the protest of Reed of Maine against any cognizance being taken of the affair.

Monday, February 5.

SENATE.—The usual routine business was attended to and then the senate resumed work on the tariff bill. Senators on both sides pounded away on various items for hours.

The net result of the afternoon's work was the reduction of the duties on cotton thread, woolen hose, shirts and drawers, machine or hand-knit, cotten laces, embroideries, velvet and the like, 5 per cent. Attempts made by Mr. Beck and others to secure greater reductions failed.

In executive session the following nominations were confirmed:

United States consuls—Charles P. Williams, at Calais; Orson V. Tousely, at Leipsic. Albert Rhodes, New York, at Eberfeld, Germany; James F. Montgomery, New York, at Trieste.

Reg'sters of Land Office—Albert K. Osburn, Bayfield, Wis.; George W. Fay, Menasha, Wis.; Edward L. Salsbury, Leadville, Colo.

Postmasters—S L. Miller, Alexandria, Minn.; M. W. Moir, Eldora Iowa; C. A. Lisle, Fort Madison, Iowa; James W. Emery, LeMars, Iowa; Alfred H. Lewis, Milbank, Dak.

HOUSE.—Mr. Cobb introduced a bill to prevent the secretary of the interior from issuing patents to land grant railroads which have not been completed within the specified time.

Mr. Grout moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill establishing the territory of North Dakota and providing a temporary government therefor. After a brief discussion in which Randall and Burrows of Michigan engaged in a controversy, the motion of Grout was lost—yeas 151, nays 110, (not the necessary two-thirds in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. Carpenter, the rules were suspended and the bill to quiet the title of Des Moines river lands passed.

A motion to suspend the rules and consider the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was lost.

A motion to suspend the rules and make it in order next Monday to report the tariff bill to the house for action was lost.

To GRUMBLERS.

All who are grumbling, or who feel disposed to grumble at a little cold weather should read the following account of the kind of weather that is being experienced in the benighted states further south. The reports from our state dailies inform us that the storm in the East has been extensively disastrous and far-reaching. In Ohio, Pennsylvania and Indiana, the rain has poured continuously and accomplished much damage. In Ohio all streams are over their banks, and bridges are washed away. At Cleveland, the machine shops, flour mills, packing houses and factories of all kinds were submerged, and over 33,000,000 feet of lumber carried away. At Toledo washouts occurred, and much damage done to public and private property. At Akron the damage is thought to be at least $50,000. The entire state was flooded, and the extent of the loss cannot yet be estimated. Several lives are reported lost. The situation in Pennsylvania is even more serious and the excitement at Titusville, where the water is the highest, is intense. The water reached the main business streets, and many people were obliged to move bag and baggage. The same condition of things extends over the entire state and the losses will aggregate many thousands of dollars. In Indiana the floods were not so great, and the rain stopped without doing much damage, except a few minor washouts in Indianapolis.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Crookston, Minnesota, held on the 3d day of February, 1883, the following resolutions were unanimously passed and ordered published:

The great and urgent necessity of more and cheaper building material in the shape of lumber throughout the Northwest, and especially in northwestern Minnesota and Dakota, presses itself upon us with irresistable force. The great bread growing center of the world, with its rapid and wonderful expansion in agricultural, as well as commercial and manufacturing interests, demands building material in larger quantities and lower rates, to improve and meet the yearly increased demand of all nations, and supply the world's deficiency in bread—the staff of life; and

WHEREAS, The question of bringing the vast forests of Red Lake pine into market has become to be a matter of vital and serious earnestness by all who are interested in the northwest, and

WHEREAS, It appears to be no longer profitable nor expedient to withhold from those who are so much in need of it for these broad and treeless prairies, and,

WHEREAS, Millions of feet are annually destroyed by fire, returning no benefit to the Indians, settlers or government, and

WHEREAS, The Red Lake Indians have repeatedly expressed a desire to convert their interests in the pine on their reservation into available means of support and would be willing to do so on a basis of equity and justice. Therefore in order to accomplish the result, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States proceed without needless delay to treat with the Red Lake Indians for the pine of their reservation and secure from them the right to enter upon the reservation and cut and remove pine logs not exceeding thirty million feet, forty millions the second year, and not exceeding fifty millions feet in any one year thereafter; the stumpage to be advertised by the United States government for a period of six months preceding such sale in some newspaper published at the capital of the State of Minnesota and in one paper published in the city of Washington, D. C., and sold to the highest bidder or bidders, at public auction. The pine to be removed from the land within a period of two years from the date of such sale, and the logs shall be manufactured within the boundaries of the United States. The proceeds of the sale of pine shall be given to the Indians upon such terms and conditions as the government shall agree with them, and as a guarantee of good faith on the part of the purchaser or purchasers they shall be required to pay fifteen per cent. of the gross amount of such sales at the time of purchase, the balance of the purchase money to be paid in full before the logs are removed from the Reservation.

Believing this method will obviate in a large degree the objections offered by Representative Washburn to the pre-emption law and at the same time open an avenue to the vast and finest body of white pine timber in Minnesota, which is, in reality, the only value there is in the whole Reservation except to the Indians themselves for hunting and fishing, and which, without the pine, would be equally as good for the purposes they use it, the reservation being unfit for agricultural purposes and only valuable for the pine now standing on it.

A. ALLEN, Chairman.
JOHN MCLEAN, Secretary.

At the hour of eight o'clock on Monday evening the meeting was called to order, and, in the absence of John McLean, W. D. Hurlbut was elected secretary. J. G. McGrew, Esq., presented the following resolutions with the recommend that they be printed in the city papers;

WHEREAS, It is now the general wish of the citizens of northwestern Minnesota, and eastern Dakota, that the national government will treat with the Red Lake band of Chippewa Indians for the pine timber on the reservation, still allowing them to occupy their lands for the purpose of cultivation, hunting and fishing, and

WHEREAS, If this course is pursued the White Earth reservation embraces ample territory for all the Indians now there, or which may be hereafter taken there, and

WHEREAS, There are now withheld from settlement thirteen townships of the finest agricultural land in northern Minnesota, awaiting the consolidation of the Chippewa Indians at White Earth, which will never be needed for that purpose, and

WHEREAS, A great number of persons desiring to secure homes have gone upon the lands so withheld, and have made settlement with the hope that said lands would soon become subject to be taken under the pre-emption and homestead laws, now therefore be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to secure the restoration of said thirteen townships of land to settlement by an executive order if possible, and if this cannot be done, then to secure the same end by proper Congressional enactment.

The resolutions were adopted and the meeting adjourned sine die.

A. ALLEN, Chairman.
W. D. HURLBUT, Secretary.

East Grand Forks Facts.

From the Courier.

Considerable lumber is being sold to the country trade.

The majority of our merchants report business on the increase.

The lumber for the new school house has been ordered, and work will be commenced immediately.

The roller skating rink at Grand Forks has been closed from the lack of patronage. The ice rink was too much for it.

Parties looking for places for investment in lands and different branches of business are making their appearance.

W. C. Nash, E. F. Masterson, J. W. Howes and Arne Higdem were in Crookston this week on business pertaining to the bridge.

The thermometer registered 40° below zero early this morning yet it is not so very uncomfortable. It's nothing when you get used to it!

J. W. Lewis will commence building an addition to his already capacious hotel next week, owing to the large run of custom he now enjoys.

Jas. Sanders, the young man who was shot by Geo. Colby some weeks ago at this place, has so far recovered form his injuries as to be able to ride out on pleasant days.

Put on your "store clothes" and go to Sunday School next Sunday. You will find it will do you a great deal more good than to spend the day in playing "seven-up" and "whisky-poker."

Christopher Coulter, proprietor of the townsite of Mallory, was in East Grand Forks Saturday and reported things lively about his place. Mr. Coulter expressed his utmost faith in our little city and will accordingly make investments here in the spring.

George Douglass, a young man at work in a lumber camp a few miles north of here, on Monday last was struck on the head by a falling tree and was pretty seriously injured. Medical aid was sent for and Douglass was taken to the Lewis House, and at last accounts is doing very well.

An order has been received at the Grand Forks land office from the president withdrawing from settlement the tract of land donated to Little Shell and his little gang of vagabonds, to compensate the redskins for relinquishing their claim to Turtle Mountain. The tract is 33 miles in length, north and south, and 24 miles east and west, situated in the northwest corner of Rolette County.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

A new specimen of seed wheat is on display at Steenerson Bros. store, it is called the Golden Star.

A. P. Bond, of the firm of Bond & Steenerson, real estate dealers, in Crookston, spent a few days in Fisher, on business this week.

A gentleman and two ladies while driving out to make a call yesterday afternoon met with a slight mishap, their horse collided with Mr. Sang's sawhorse and threw them all into the snow.

A number of the enterprising literary people of Fisher, met last Wednesday evening at the residence of Mr. Freeman, and organized a literary and social society, to be called the Fisher Lyceum, Tom Gunness was chosen secretary.

A narrow escape from freezing occurred last Thursday night. Mr. G. C. Wainright and his son-in-law W. Losey, were on their way home from Euclid, via Fisher, leaving the latter place about dark, when about half way home they lost the track in the darkness and blinding snow storm raging at the time. When they found out their situation, they abandoned one sled, hitching the horses behind the other one and struck out what they thought was a straight course for home regardless of road, but soon concluded that they were as likely to be going the wrong direction as the right, and that it was useless to try any further, as they were only getting out of one drift pile into another, perhaps a worse one. They resolved to stop and fix themselves for the emergency. Placing the horses in the best manner possible to stand the storm, they be-took themselves to the sled box and covered up with the remaining wraps and robes where they froze it out until morning. When day came they they were not long in getting home where they arrived without any very serious damage, from frost, except a few fingers and thumbs slightly frost bitten. Moral: never pass a good stopping place in a Minnesota blizzard.

FOOD FOR REFLECTION.

Jamestown Capital.

Mr. E. P. Wells, of this city, owns a number of small farms in this and adjoining counties and has published a statement of the results of his 1882 farming operations. Summarized, this statement is about as follows: Whole number of acres in farms, 2,720; number of acres cultivated in 1882, 1,087; total investment in the above 2,720 acres and the buildings and other improvements thereon, $26217.94; total products of 1,087 acres for 1882, 16,197 bushels of wheat, 14,616 bushels of oats, 1,050 bushels of potatoes and 105 tons of hay; the whole either sold or marketable for $33,444.13. After deducting all expenses the net proceeds realized by Mr. Wells from the 1,087 acres bring $7,814 71, or 29 per cent. on the capital invested.

The 1,720 acres would find ready sale to-day for $40,000, showing an additional profit which may properly be credited to the last three years farm operations of about $15,000 more. From one piece of wheat measuring 27 acres the product was 1,054 bushes—39¼ bushels per acre. From 100 measured acres the yield was 3,405 bushels of No. 1 hard; from another farm of 205 acres in La Moure County there was threshed and measured 6,199 bushels of wheat, being over 30 bushels per acre. Three or four small farms poorly fitted and shiftlessly worked, yielded only 10 to 12 bushels of wheat and 25 bushels of oats per acre. One-half of one farm was broken up in June of the previous year, and yielded 34 bushels per acre, the other half of the same field broken and fitted in the same way, but the work done in the latter part of July and August, only produced 16 bushels per acre.

All of our old farmers could, if they would, furnish as succinct and favorable statements of their farm operations as the above, and such showings from responsible sources are better than tons of ordinary boom literature.

WINTERS IN MINNESOTA.

Todd County Argus.

The solid cold weather of the past month has made a good many people wish they lived farther south where summer reigns the year round. It is pleasant to know that very few really wish such a change. They get tired of bracing up against weather which holds the mercury at ten degrees below zero all day and for the time being would gladly exchange with their southern neighbors, but if the change were offered them with the condition that they take with the balmy southern breeze the ague and yellow fever, they would promptly refuse the change. Two years ago, the writer of this article was in conversation with several men in Ortonville on the subject of Minnesota winters, when one of the number, Mr. Schumaker, now the mayor of that incipient city, told of his experience down in the sickly regions of the south during the war. When his regiment, fresh from the healthy northern climate, first marched by the southern homes of the "poor white trash," men, women and children stared at the boys in blue in wonder. It was a surprising sight to see such a large company of robust men with the hue of health on their faces. For miles and miles, not a single southern native was seen who appeared to have good health. It was in the sickly season of the year and on the face of every inhabitant was written the penalty of constantly living in a malaria atmosphere. The strong, healthy men of this regiment who created such a sensation among the people down there, soon succumbed to the same influence, and many a soldier who carried south a healthy constitution, came home broken down for life, or was buried under southern soil, the victim of the climate. Our winters are often unpleasantly cold, but here in Todd County is abundance of fuel without cost except the trouble of preparing it for use, and plenty of building material for comfortable houses and barns. With these, people can live here as pleasantly as anywhere and at the same time enjoy good health.

The World's Cyclopedia of Biography

Cyclopedias of Biography are usually made up of an alphabetical list, with brief sketches, principally of the names of people of whom you have never heard, and to know whom would add greatly neither to your pleasure, nor your mental wealth. "The World's Cyclopedia of Biography," now publishing, is upon a different plan. It contains only the stories of the lives of the famous men and women who have made the world's history; who are really worth knowing, and who are written about by authors often equally eminent, in the field of literature, with the subjects whom they describe. Each volume is complete in itself, so that if you do not want, or cannot afford, all, you can take what best pleases, or is of most worth to you. The five volumes thus far issued narrate the achievements of nearly two hundred of the most famous and worthy of the world's heros. Volume IV, recently published, a very handsome large 12mo., of about 750 pages, for the price of 70 cents, contains a new and excellent "Life of Washington;" a reprint of the standard and thrilling Weems' "Life of General Marion," and a new "Life of Oliver Cromwell" by the brilliant writer, E. Paxton Hood. To illustrate the remarkable economy in cost, compared with previous publications; the present importing price of the Life of Cromwell is $3—here, in equally good type, handsomely printed, with two other important works thrown in, it costs only 70 cent; even beyond this, as a means of most widely and effectually advertising the biographical series, the publishers will send, post-paid, a paper-bound edition of the Hood's "Life of Cromwell," to any address, on receipt of 15 cents, and then, if the purchaser desires to secure the bound volume, will credit 15 cents toward the price of the same. It will be strange if such books, at such prices, do not find their way into almost every home. "Biography is the most universally pleasant, universally profitable of all reading," will send Thomas Carlyle. How, indeed, can the heroes of "fiction" be compared in interest with these heroes of all time, Washington and Cromwell? John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

Literary Curiosities.

The poet, Richard Henry Stoddard's brilliant narrative of the "Life of Washington Irving" forms No. 4 in the elegant little Elzevir Library, and is sold for the price of only 6 cents! After all, cheap and handsome books are not limited to the so-called "piratical reprints," as this illustrates: the publishers paid Mr. Stoddard $500 for the Manuscript of this sketch—which is a tax of only a half-cent each, when charged over to one hundred thousand of their customers. Number 5 of the Library, also just issued, contains Andrew Wilson's "The Sea-Serpents of Science," price 2 cents, and Number 6, Tennyson's famous "Enoch Arden," price 2 cents—in former years sold in large editions for $1.00, or more, per copy. And yet, these numbers are in beautiful type, handsomely printed on excellent paper. Sold by all dealers. John B. Alden Publisher, 18 Vesey St., New York.

The American Peerless Dictionary, published by H. C. Wilkinson & Co., New York, contains a large amount of information pressed into a small compass but so well arranged and indexed as to be easily referred to. In addition to the dictionary proper, it contains a large collection of Words, Phrases, Proverbs and Quotations from the Ancient and Modern Languages; lists of Scripture proper names, of American Geographical names, of Abbreviations used in writing and printing, and many additional words now in general use that are not found in other dictionaries. Nearly one hundred pages are devoted to miscellaneous information on matters pertaining to the science of language and on a variety of subjects connected with the early history of our country, the formation of the constitution and the present administration of government in its varied departments, the status of the Army and Navy, the public lands, the productions, the revenues, &c. In fine there is brought together in this book, and ready for use a variety of information concerning the Country and Government that every one ought to know.—[Western Christian Advocate.

These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the torsional strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds to the elasticity of the springs producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—steel tires and axles, trimmings of never fading cloth or fancy leather.

The Battle of the Books.

Alden, of "Literary Revolution" memory, is raising again the hopes and enthusiasm of those who delight in books. A few months ago his enemies thought, and his friends feared, that his enterprise had met with irretrievable overthrow; but here he is again with "a larger catalogue of better books, at lower prices than ever before." His semiweekly Elzevir Magazine is certainly a most unique, charming, and marvelously cheap collection of gems of literature. It gives, for instance, Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," Wilson's "The Sea Serpents of Science," Farrar's "The Burning of Rome," Irving's "Rip Van Winkle," Goldsmith's "The Deserted Village, and the Traveler," each complete, for only two cents. a "Life of Washington Isving," by the poet R. H. Stoddard, foe 6 cents; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," complete, finely illustrated, for ten cents, and numerous others like in character and in price. If you think it incredible, send a postal card and a specimen copy will be sent you free. His monthly magazine, Choice Literature, at 25 cents a year, contains the choicest selections from the foreign magazines and reviews, in amount nearly as much as one of the four dollar magazines, and it is printed in excellent style; a copy of this also will be set free on application. Besides num ro is other publications, he is issuing a series of cyclopedias, each devoted to a special subject, such as Cyclopedias of History Biography, Poetry, Fiction, Religious Literature, Choice Prose, Wit and Humor, etc.; of these he has somrthing over thirty volumns ready for delivery, and many others to follow soon. Specimens received at this office show excellent workmanship in euery respect; much superior to the average of the publications of the American Book Exchange. He wants a club agent in every neighborhood, and will send cataloge with large inducements free on request. Address John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey street, New York.

A physician gives the following rule by which to determine dyphtheria from ulcerated sore throat. He says: "If the throat is red and smaller, no fear of dyphtheria. But if it looks as though somebody had blown a handful of ashes into the throat—dull gray color—look out. It's dyphtheria's danger signal."

Fargo Republican: Observation and experience teach that after a cold and freezing winter an early spring and fruitful season may usually be expected, and the old residents here are predicting that seeding will commence early. In the spring of 1879, many farmers commenced seeding in March, some of them as early as the 24th of that month, and seeding was generally done by the 10th of April. In 1880 the season was a week or two later, and in both years there were no great floods and the Red River rose a few feet above its ordinary high water.

The Roy-Beaudry Investigation.

Marshall County Banner.

The examination of Camile Roy and [illegible] Beaudry, charged with having [illegible] lee Beaudry during the [illegible] 0.h, progresses slowly, [illegible] itnesses being French [illegible] ny taken through an [illegible] Monday P. A. Dufour [illegible] ler, two able attorneys, [illegible] on, took charge of the case [illegible] of the State, assisted by Mr. Bayrell, Brown and Clark de- [illegible] Mrs. Azilda Beaudry, wife of [illegible] ceased, was arrested, is in custody [illegible] Deputy Sheriff Bennewitz, pending [illegible] e examination of Roy. An inquest was ordered and the remains of the unfortunate man were taken up and examined by Doctors Stone and Lelcourt. The body was scarcely recognizable as that of a human being; the legs and arms were gone; the under jaw, face, and front part of the skull were burned away, and the flesh of the body, in front, was generally burned off. No evidences of violence were found by the examining surgeons; they found the lungs full of blood, a little blood in the heart and a little in the brain. They testified in substance, that the blood in the lungs was evidence that no serious wounds had been made on the body of the deceased, with any sharp instrument, at the time of his death; that if such had been the case, the system would have been drained of blood. They could not form any opinion as to the cause of death. After a lengthy investigation, the coroner's jury found the following verdict: "That the said Amedeo Beaudry came to his death at the town of Middle River, in the County of Marshall, on the 21st day of January, 1883, and that his death was caused by criminal violence at the hands of Camile Roy and Azilda Beaudry, but that the jury are unable to say whether he was killed by a deadly weapon or with fire."

By consent of council the examination was adjourned until Wednesday next at 2 o'clock. Roy was taken to the Polk County jail and Mrs. Beaudry placed in charge of Deputy Sheriff [illegible] ewitz.

[illegible] efendants claim that Beaudry [illegible] ife about as follows: On the [illegible] ming of January 21st, between 2 and [illegible] audry got out of bed and [illegible] build a fire in a heating [illegible] was some five or six feet [illegible] ed where himself and wife were sleeping. He took a kerosene can containing nearly a gallon of oil, and commenced pouring oil into the stove, when the can exploded setting the house on fire, but not seriously injuring Beaudry. All efforts to extinguish the flames failed, and portions of the household effects were thrown out, and when the fire was well under way, Beaudry entered the upper part of the building by a window, to save some flour that was stored there; that he threw out two or three sacks, and and was not seen after that until found in the ruins of the building.

THE DAIRYING INTERESTS.

Glencoe Enterprise.

The Enterprise has loud and zealously advocated the profit there is for farmers in dairying and stock-raising. Under the above heading the Swift County Press says that the subject of dairying is receiving its merited of discussion and experiment throughout our state and we are right glad to note that fact, for that subject is very closely allied in its bearing and results to another equally interesting one, viz: stock raising. The two go hand in hand, so to speak, and no matter which may be the first to gain a foothold among the farming class, it only foreshadows the advent of the other. Hence we say, that any interest manifested in either should be fostered and furthered Butter and cheese making and the raising of stock, as a financial success, have long ago passed the rubicon of doubt, and by the thoughtful farmer are fixed upon as the only source through which prosperity can reach and resucitate the country. They are no longer a hazard or experiment. The farmers of other states have proved the efficacy of the change and demonstrated its benefits to the world by the change wrought in their financial condition. And why cannot Minnesota fall into line and give a similar demonstration of the profits of dairying and stock raising? A number of our farmers have already taken steps in that direction but not enough to give the matter prominence in the agricultural interests of our country that it really deserves. One thing is as certain as the sun's rising and setting and that is, until exclusive wheat raising is expunged from our system of farming, solid prosperity can never visit this state, or any other state, for that matter. Stock raising is the very backbone of prosperity to us all.

Pioneer Press,

The Minneapolis lumbermen do not share the broad and enlightened views of their Winona brethren about the question of free lumber. So far as their opinions found expression in a rather comprehensive series of interviews yesterday, they are uniformly opposed to the removal or reduction of the present tariff. Their reasons are frankly given. They say the proposed change will bring more Canadian lumber into the country and reduce the price. From the point of view of the consumers of lumber, who outnumber the dealers several hundred to one, these are excellent reasons for reducing or removing the duty. From the point of view of the national good, without reference to the cost of the article, a change in the law which will increase the importation of lumber, and check the rapid consumption of our own pine, is most desirable. The lumber duty is the most inexcusable folly and iniquity of the whole monstrous bundle of iniquities and absurdities called the tariff law. It cuts two ways. It taxes the consumer to encourage the destruction of the forests. Lumber is a peculiar product, in that it is limited in quantity, and, once the supply is exhausted, cannot be replaced for several generations. The law should study the preservation of the forests instead of encouraging their extinction, should stimulate instead of prohibiting the importation of supplies from other countries. Even from their own narrow point of view, the opposition of the Minneapolis lumbermen to tariff reduction is less excusable than those in Maine and Michigan, since there is little Canadian lumber to come into immediate competition in their markets. They would suffer, of course, from the general decline of price; but in the long run, the trade would gain by the preservation of native forests.

A MINNESOTA WINTER.

Its Delights and Pleasures as Described by a Kentucky Journalist.

Louisville Journal-Courier.

I look upon it as the one great of the year to come into this wonderful northwestern country for my holiday vacation, not when the summer upon the land, and Minnesota resorts swarm with eastern and southern people, but when mid-winter has laid its icy hand very firmly on hill and valley, forest and stream. It is then of all other times and places, that one gets new life and strength, when the blood tingles and leaps upwards as the temperature crawls downward, when every breath you breathe and every step you take adds elation to the whole being. I wish I could put in rythmmitic numbers what is felt and known to the inner being up here where the blizzards are supposed to originate, and I don't believe there is another place on earth where there is such a general climatic intoxication in living as right here in these Minnesota winters. What joyousness is in them, though? On every hand is plenty—plenty of that mother of goodness as well as good cheer. No people else are so broad-buttocked, broad-breasted and broad-faced with smiles, as these Minnesota people. There is an everlasting air of your well-fed, well-clad, well-housed and environed look about them; and in these rare winter times one coming from out the grind and smirch of the great cities finds a new and joyous life everywhere. Pictures of prosperous New England homes, and of the Blue-grass firesides there be in the looks, but here you have the wealth of the one and the lordly courteousness of the other in an empire of happy homes!

Day or night everywhere the riotous songs of the sleigh-bells' a never ending chorus of mirth and gladness. Day or night the old-fashioned, though in this new land, "bee" and "party" and "rout." Day and night all that in the richness and bounteousness of a kind heaven makes the heart warm, the spirit glad, the life rounded and complete. Day and night and night and day, plenty, prosperity, peace.

Why, this is an idyllic land and an idyllic people, so near have their conditions come to the perfect ones of the dreamer's dreams and the pain there is in it to him coming to it and looking upon it, lies only in turning back to the sickening drudgery of the other kind of life so many of us are compelled to live.

But leaving all this which comes to one as an individual and undefinable revelation and getting closer to material things, to be here and see, from time to time the general prosperity of this empire of the Northwest tends to a larger and broader idea of our own country. No one who has not watched its growth for years can by any possibility from a proper conception of the marvelous strides which are making in every direction. Not only for the last quarter century have the best people of the East and South—Minnesota is full of Southern people, and, in Illinois and notably in Chicago, they have brought here something more than the abstract of space—but the continual inauguration of great colonies of the best brain and brawn from among the middle classes of Europe (and here is something for those who have the material development of the South at heart to reflect upon,) is a wonder and a marvel in itself. Here, with the thermometer from ten to twenty degrees below zero, they are still pouring in, and so it goes all winter long.

I asked Bishop Ireland how he accounted for it all.

"Why," said he, "these emigrants who arrive here at the rate of from one to six carloads daily, and who are destined for remote points hundreds of miles Northwest of here, in Minnesota, Dakota and Manitoba, come all along through this vigorous winter weather for several reasons. The principal one is they are less liable in their trip across the ocean to be herded like cattle in the steerage; rates are also made somewhat cheaper to them; and on arrival at the villages and towns throughout the Northwest nearest their final destination, they are enabled to live during the winter cheaper than in the larger cities, and have time to become acquainted with their surroundings, with their necessities under the new order of things, with our currency, with implements required for agricultural labor, and with the little, yet essential needs in their new life; so that when spring comes they are ready to begin their labors with the season intelligently and effectively."

Narrow Escape.

Norman County Banner: On Friday evening last, Mr. John Anderson, a young man from Minneapolis who has been teaching school over in Dakota, started for a neighbor's house, about two miles from where he was teaching, on a pair of Norwegian snow shoes. He lost his way and wandered over the prairie until four o'clock Saturday morning when he came to Mr. Scheie's residence in the town of Marsh River, this county, and about forty miles from where he started the night before. He was taken in and upon examination it was found that his right foot was badly frozen. He remained at Mr. Scheie's over Saturday and Sunday, was brought to this place and placed under the care of Dr. Hicks, who thinks that amputation will not be necessary. Mr. Anderson took Sunday evening's train for his home in Minneapolis. He said that he considered himself very fortunate taking all things into consideration and that he would be very careful about exposing himself in the future. Mr. Anderson being a Mason he was given the best of care while in this place by members of that order.

Ada Alert: There is, perhaps, no place on earth where nature is more lavish with her bountiful gifts, than the Red River Valley. Everything conduces to health, wealth and happiness. The bright sun seldom hides her face in winter or summer. The stars shine with dazzling brilliancy, equalled only in the tropics. The rich virgin soil needs but to be disturbed to yield almost spontaneously the most abundant harvests of everything in the way of fruits, vegetables or cereals known in the temperate zone. Nature does not stop here; the glorious air of the valley which exhilerates the spirits to such a degree that the body is rendered insensible to cold, though the mercury is in the twenties, is conducive to the most glorious health and fecundity. On the farm of a gentleman not one thousand miles from Ada, in one day, there was ushered into the world in the space of twelve hours, a fine baby, a brood of twelve chickens, a calf and a litter of twelve kitters, all doing well. For a fruitful country the Red River Valley "takes the cake."

Fine weather for sleighing and it is being improved.

Bridget or not to Bridget is the question that interests our city dads just now.

Fine thawy weather in these days giving evidence of a gradual disappearance of the snow and an early spring.

Hon. B. Sampson has gone into the country to make arrangements for getting out timbers for the 200 barrel flouring mill.

Mr. A. M. Stewart has returned, bringing his bride, whom our citizens used to know as Miss Helen Brown. Welcome home.

If any body doubts that Hank Lewis is a genius he should gaze upon that illustrated barrel forninst the dhure at Sargent & Lewis'.

J. D. Ball, an old-time citizen of Crookston was in the city on Monday. J. D. is now located at Grafton where he has a good business.

Our county dads have been in solemn conclave this week and much business has been done. They did not finish in time for our issue this week.

Hon. A. H. Baker, our member of the Legislature is confined to his room at the Windsor house in St. Paul with a severe attack of the rheumatism.

Jay Losey and his father-in-law, Mr. Wainwright have gone out to the Missouri River to take a claim. They will doubtless arrive in time to see that country in its most attractive form—winter-time.

Valentine day passed off in the usual good old-fashioned way—everybody who got a valentine was mad at the insult and everybody who did not was mad at the slight. All mad and accordingly happy.

Jake Francis met us on the street on Wednesday with a grin on his face about a mile long. He slyly remarked "its a girl, 8 pounds, and it is a good girl because it arrived on Sunday."

While other sections of the country devastated by floods, the Red River Valley pursues the even tenor of her way in peace and prosperity. MORAL—Come to the great Red River Valley and be prosperous and happy.

Real estate in Crookston is still on the move. The irrepressible boomer, John McLean, has negotiated the sale of Frank Jerome's one-half interest in the town site known as Jerome's Addition, to Judge D. Brower, for $15,000.

R. W. Ranney finished the Carman brick yard well last week and moved his apparatus out to the JOURNAL farm where he is probing into the bosom of Mother Earth in quest of a flowing well. At last accounts he had got down 100 feet.

Especial attention is called to the advertisement of Mr. D. Buchanan, elsewhere in this issue. Mr. B. is a thorough business man, means and will perform just what he says. Drop in and look over his stock and get his prices.

Mr. Sewall P. Norton spent some time in the city this week and showed his good sense by taking a set of Tom Bjoin's new Oscillating Bob-sleds out to his Maple Lake farm when he returned. He reports every body happy and contented out there.

The floods along the Ohio River and its tributaries are still raging and much damage has been done. Cincinnati is in a pitiable plight, being nearly all under water, on the streets along the river the water is up to the second story of the buildings.

Mr. F. [illegible] of Johnson Bros. & Wing, left for Chicago on Monday night. [illegible] put in a large stock of paints, oils, wall paper, etc., etc. and meanwhile to reduce stock to make room, will sell crockery below cost. Go and see the bargains offered.

W. D. Carlton, of Angus, was up from the pine woods last week to see how the folks were [illegible] at home. He found them all right and returned to the woods on Friday evening. He expects to return over land in the spring via White Earth, Red Lake Falls and Euclid.

On Saturday last Mr. M. P. Losey was summoned to Chicago by a telegram from his son, G. W., announcing the death of his oldest son who was in business in Chicago. Mr. Losey reached St. Paul on Sunday morning and had to stay until evening before he could get a train and expected to reach Chicago on Monday noon. He will return to his home at Euclid as soon as his sad mission in Chicago is fulfilled.

The M. E. Church Lyceum held their regular meeting at the usual time and place. The society is constantly increasing in numbers and gaining popularity. All who were so fortunate as to be present were well entertained, the subject before the house being ably discussed by the opposing parties, the decision was rendered in favor of the affirmative. By special request another masquerade ball will be held at Ericsson's hall on Wednesday evening Feb. 28th. Max Ericsson is corresponding with parties to furnish costumes and due notice of their arrival will be given hereafter.

If our farmers would be successful in raising wheat they will be very careful in selecting the best wheat, free from foul seeds. E. D. Childs & Co., offer elsewhere in our columns to supply extra No. 1 Hard free from foul seeds.

Dr. A Nelson was in our city for a few days this week and reports matters flourishing in his vicinity, every body contented and happy and making big calculations on seeding as soon as the ground is ready.

A newsy letter from Fertile is welcomed to a place in our columns this week. Fertile is worthy the good representation it is receiving from the pen of its able correspondent and we trust that he will not soon weary in well doing.

The bell tower is nearly completed and the bell is in place. It is intended to ring out its wild alarums in case of fire. Now, if some arrangments could be made to have it used on Sabbath days, until the churches get bells of their own, we think it would be appreciated by all church-going people.

An interesting letter from Aldal greets our readers this week, full of news and evidences of prosperity of the citizens of that live town. When a town has life enough to let people know what is going on it is on the high road to prosperity and that's what's the matter with Aldal. We trust that "VIKING" will come again and often.

A measure of vast importance to Polk County is pending in the Legislature and several bills have been introduced looking to system of drainage. There is one that provides for drainage by counties and another by towns but as we have not examined them we are not prepared to discuss their relative values. That some drainage should be had is certainly obvious if one is at all aquainted with the country but just what system should be adopted we are uncertain. From what we have heard of the bills now up we should say that both have serious defects. We shall look the subject up and report later.

At the council meeting on Saturday evening next, a request will be made for an appropriation to build bridges. Mr. Sampson makes a proposition that could not be fairer we think and we think it would be for the interest of the city to give it due consideration. Mr. Sampson agrees to erect a flouring mill to cost not less than $40,000, furnished with all the latest improvements and having a capacity of 200 barrels a day. He will also plat the 84 acres which lie within the city limits and will sell lots subject to being built upon at such figures as shall induce a rapid sale. He will further agree that, if the increased revenue derived therefrom is not sufficient to indemnify the city in making the appropriation he will refund the money to the city which they shall appropriate. In addition to these improvements, guaranteed, he intends to lay out the balance of his property over there into lots which will be sold as rapidly as possible. He has also a paper mill project in view which he is sanguine will prove a success. One church is to be built over there in the spring ground for which has been selected. The object in asking for the appropriation now is that the amount can be bonded while the Legislature is in session which will leave only the interest at 7 per cent to be paid annually. We think this a very reasonable proposition and hope that it will prevail. Some object upon the ground of high taxes, forgetting that the high rates result from not having the floating indebtedness bonded and that our taxes would be easy enough if this were done and at the same time we could be enjoying all the benefits to be derived from all necessary improvements. In less than two years the city will see the necessity of this appropriation, and then if we wish to make it we should have to do it by an issue of orders and wait until another session of the Legislature for a chance to bond. It would be wise to provide the necessary [illegible]

Only three weeks more of this session of the Legislature remains and if any steps to bond our city debt are to be taken it must be done soon. If this business is to be attended to it should be done at once and that it should be done is evident to every tax payer in this city.

At 3 p. m., to-day the JOURNAL received a telephone message from D. Jacobus, in Kretzschmar's Block, Red Lake Falls, saying that the wire is all up and everything in working order. Ed. Walsh is with Jake and we talked with him. The wire works so perfectly that we could hear the boys breathe and smile and one would not think them so far away. They will return to the city to-night.

Knute Steenerson, of St. Hilaire, went to St. Paul last Friday night. To have seen him when he left Crookston on Friday evening one would not have thought that before the next day's sun had risen and set the great doors of the State Prison at Stillwater would close behind him—but they did. Upon his arrival at St. Paul on Saturday morning he was arrested—by the Legislative delegation going to Stillwater to examine the State Prison and taken with them to Stillwater. He must have been a good boy for he was released at night and brought back to St. Paul.—(St. Hilaire Spectator, please don't give this away.—ED. JOURNAL.)

A BIG LOAD.

On Thursday of last week Mr. John Knudson hauled to the city from his farm six miles out, 3530 lbs of hay with a team of two horses. The hay was weighed on H. Steege's scales, several parties being witnesses to the correctness of the statement.

COMBINATION BUGGY GEAR. WITH LONGITUDINAL SPRING.

The Combination Buggy, (cash price at factory, $100,) of which the above cut represents the Gear, has become known as the very best for easy riding and durable qualities. Years of most trying use, in private and in livery, has abundantly proved this fact. These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the torsional strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds to the elasticity of the springs producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—steel tires and axles, trimmings of never-fading cloth or fancy leather.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

A SMALL BEGINNING.

A little ground floor room, a little fire in a small stove, burning dully as fires are apt to do at times when their blaze may be worth something in the way of cheer; out doors, the raw gray of a spring thaw; on the window-seat two girls crouched together, and looking out with faces as disconsolate as the weather. Such was the picture presented at No. 13 Farewell street, three years ago last March.

Farewell street was so named because of its being the customary route of exit from the old cemetery; the point where mourners were supposed to turn for a last look at the gates which had just shut in the newly buried friend; and this association, as well as the glimpse of the tall cemetery fence, topped with mournful evergreens which bounded the view, did not tend to make the sad outlook any the less sad on that dismal day. For it was only a fortnight since Delia and Hetty Willett, the girls on the window-seat, had left within those gates the kind old grand-mother who for years had stood to them in the stead of father and mother both.

"The Willetts," as the neighbors called them, using the collective phrase always, were twins, and just 18 years old. Bearing to each other even a stronger personal likeness than twins customarily possess, they were in other points curiously unlike. Delia was soft and clinging, Hetty vigorous and self-reliant. Delia loved to be guided, Hetty to guide; the former had few independent views and opinions, the latter was brimful of ideas and fancies, plans and purposes, some crude, some foolish, but all her own. Yet, oddly enough, it was Delia, very often, who gave the casting vote in their decisions, for Hetty's love for her slender twin was a sentiment so deep and intense, that she often yielded against her own better sense and judgment, simply for the pleasure of yielding to what Delia wished. Delia in return adored her sister, waited on her, petted, consoled, "exactly as if she were Hetty's wife," Aunt Polly said, "and the worst was they suited each other so well that no one else would ever suit either of them, and they were bound to die old maids in consequence!"

But 18 can laugh at such auguries, and there was no thought or question of marriage in the minds of the sisters, as they crouched that afternoon close together on the old window seat.

A very different question absorbed them and a perplexing one; how they were to live, and keep together while doing so, which meant pretty much the same to them both. Grandmother's death had left them so very, very little—her annuity died with her. There was the old house, the plain, worn furniture to which they had become accustomed all their lives, and about a hundred dollars a year. What could they do with that?"

"If only one of us happened to be clever," sighed Delia. "If I could paint pictures, or you had a talent for writing, how easy it would be."

"I don't know as to to that," responded Hetty. "Seems to me I've heard of people who did those things and yet didn't find it so mighty easy to get along. Somebody's got to buy the pictures after they're painted, and read the books, and pay for them." She spoke in an absent tone, and her brow was knitted into the little frown which Delia knew betokened that her twin was puzzling hard over something.

"Don't scowl, it'll spoil your forehead," she said, smoothing out the objectionable frown with her fingers.

"Was I scowling? Well, never mind; I'm trying to think, Dely. You can't paint and I can't write. The question is, what can we do?"

"That is the question," said a voice at the door. It was Aunt Polly's voice. She managed on most days to drop in and give a look to them, the lonely "little creeturs," as she would have expressed it.

"You're consultin', I see," she said, taking in the situation at a glance; the dismal room, the depressed and tearful cheeks of the two girls; the lack of comfort and cheer. She twitched open the stove door as she passed, threw in a stick of wood, twirled the damper, and gave a brisk, ranting shake to the ashes—all with a turn of the hand, as it were—attentions to which the stove presently responded with a brisk roar. "Well, its time you did. I was planning to have a talk with you before long, for you ought to settle to something. Pull the blind down, Dely, and Hetty, you light the lamp, and come to the fire both of you, and let's see what we can make of it. It's a tangled skein enough, I don't deny it; but most skeins are that, and there's always a right end somewhere, if the Lord'll give us sense enough to get hold of it and keep on pulling out and winding up."

Presently the girls were seated close to Aunt Polly's rocking chair. The room looked more cheerful now, with the lamp-light and the yellow glow from the stove, and both were conscious of a sense of hopefulness.

"Now—what can you do?" demanded Aunt Polly, whirling round in her chair so as to face them.

"We hadn't got so far as that when you came in," replied Hetty; "I suppose we must do what other people do in the same circumstances."

"What is that?"

"Teach something, or sew, I suppose."

"Sewing's slow starvation, in my opinion, unless you've got a machine, which you haven't, and not much better then. What do you know that you can teach?"

"Not much," replied Hetty, humbly, while Delia added, hesitatingly: "We could teach children their letters, perhaps."

"I presume you could," responded Aunt Polly, dryly. "But though you may'nt know it, perhaps there are about fifty women in this town can do the same, and who mean to do it. And most of them have got the start of you in one way or another, so what's your chance worth? No, girls, sewing and teaching are played out. They are good things in their way, but every woman who's got her living to earn thinks of them the first thing and nothing else, and the market is always overstocked. The [illegible] to you is to take up something you can do better than other people—that's what gives folks a real chance. Now, what is there?"

"There isn't anything I can do better than other people," cried the dismayed Delia. "Nor Hetty either—except make gingerbread," she added, with a faint little laugh. "Hetty beats everybody at that, grandmother always said."

"Very well, make gingerbread then. That's your thing to do," said Aunt Polly.

Hetty looked at her with incredulous eyes.

"You are not in earnest, are you?" she said.

"I am; in dead earnest."

"But, Aunt Polly, gingerbread! Such a little thing as that! Who ever heard of a girl's doing such a thing?"

"All the better if they never did. A new trade has a double chance. As for the "little," great things often come from small beginnings. Fortunes have been made out of gingerbread before now, I'll be bound, or if not that, out of something no bigger. No, Hetty, depend upon it, if your gingerbread is best, folks will want it. And if your teaching or sewing is only second best, they won't. It's the law of human nature, and a very good law, too, though it cuts the wrong way sometimes, like all laws."

"Aunt Polly, you're a genius," cried Hetty, warmed into sudden glow by this vigorous common sense. "I can make good gingerbread, and it's just as you say, neither of us know enough to teach well, and we are both poor hands at sewing, and we should have a much better chance if we tried to do what we can and not what we can't. Why shouldn't I make gingerbread? Dely'd help me, and if folks liked our things and bought them, we could live and keep together. We could make a kind of shop of this room, couldn't we? What do you think?"

"Tisn't a bit bad place for such a trade," said Aunt Polly, slowly measuring the room with her eyes. "Being on a corner is an advantage, you see; and there's that double winder on the street gives a first-rate chance to show what you've got to sell. I never did see no use in that winder before. My father he had it cut for a kind of whim like, and we all thought it was notional in him; but, as they say, keep a thing long enough and a use'll turn up. It's a sort of gain for you, too, having the house so old-fashioned. Folks has a hankering for such things, nowadays—the Lord knows why. I hear 'em going on about it when I'm out tailorin'; calling ugly things 'quaint!' and lovely, because they're old. Hetty,"—with sudden inspiration—"here's an idea for you, be 'quaint!' Don't try for a shop; keep the room a room, and make it as old-fashioned looking as you can, and I'll bet a cookie that your gingerbread'll be twice as popular with one set of folks, and if it's first-rate gingerbread, the other set who don't care for old things will like it just as well."

What a bracing thing is a word in season. Aunt Polly's little seed of suggestion grew and spread like Jack's fabled bean-stalk.

"Your light biscuits always turn out well," said Delia.

"And my snaps. Grandmother always liked them so much. And you're a good hand at loaf bread, you know. Aunt Polly, I seem to smell a fortune in the air. We will begin at once, just as soon as I can get a half barrel of flour and put an advertisement in the paper."

Hetty had a ready wit, and Aunt Polly's hint as to "quaintness" was not lost upon her. The advertisement, when it appeared the next day but one, ran thus: "After Monday next, the Old Time Bakery, corner of Farewell and Martin streets, will be prepared to furnish, to order, fresh bread, buns, biscuits and grandmother's gingerbread, all home-made."

People smiled over the little notice, but the odd wording stuck in their memories as odd things will, and more than one person went out of his way during the next week to take a look into the low, wide window, within which, on a broad, napkin-covered shelf stood rows of biscuits light, and white, but which glazed with shining, umber brown, and loaves of gingerbread, whose complexion and smell were enough to vouch for their excellence. Acting on Aunt Polly's suggestion, Hetty had set forth her wares on plates of the oldest and oddest pattern which could be found in grandmother's closet. A queer, tall pitcher flanked them on either side, and round the window frame she had twined the long, luxuriant shoots of a potted ivy. Altogether the effect was pretty, and no one need be told that the pitchers had for years been constructed to the reception of yeast and corks, or that the plates had long since been regulated to kitchen use as too shabby for better occasions.

"Hain't ye no white chany?" remarked their first customer, an old woman, as she counted out the pennies for a half dozen biscuit. "It would kind of set your cakes off."

"We used what we had," replied Hetty, diplomatically. "But I hope your biscuits will taste just as good as if they came off a white plate."

This old woman, two others, and a little boy, were the only customers the first day.

"Tisn't a bit a good beginning," declared Delia, pouring the money recieved out of an old-fashioned china tea-caddy, which Hetty had unearthed in an up-stair closet and brought down to serve as a till. "Two dozen biscuits, that's 24 cents, a loaf of gingerbread, and about half the buns. That's 53 cents in all. What did you say the material cost?"

"About 70 cents. But then we have our supper and breakfast out of them, and nearly half the stock to sell at reduced rate to-morrow. We shan't lose anything I reckon, but we shan't gain much either."

"Rome wasn't built all in a minute. You will do yet," remarked Aunt Polly, who had dropped in to hear the result of the first day's sales.

But two days—three—a week went by and still trade did not materially improve, and it took all Aunt Polly's wise laws and hopeful auguries to keep their spirits up. Each day showed the same record, no loss, but almost no gain. Toward the end of the second week, matters mended. Mrs. Corliss, the wife of a wealthy manufacturer, having an errand in Farewell street, happened to pass the little window, and her bric-a-brac-loving eyes were caught at once by its unusual appearance. She stopped, studied the whole arrangement, from the ivy wreath to the old pitchers; a recollection of the droll little advertisement over which she had laughed a few days previously came over her. "I declare, this is the very place." she said to herself, and opening the door she entered, precisely as Hetty came from the kitchen, through the opposite door, a handkerchief tied over her shiny hair, a white apron with a little ruffled waist protecting her print gown, her cheeks flushed rosy pink with heat, and in her hand a tray full of crisp, delectably smelling ginger-snaps.

"A regular study—like a Flemish picture," Mrs. Corliss said afterward. She fell in love, at once, with the quaint room, the pretty sisters, the old china, stayed twenty minutes nibbling ginger-snaps, and looking about her, bought a dollar's worth of everything "on trial" as she said, and swept out leaving a wake of rose-colored hope in the air—and Delia and Hetty executing a wild waltz behind her back, for joy and congratulation.

"Luck has turned—I know, I feel it," declared Hetty.

Luck had turned. Mrs. Corliss raved to everybody she knew about the room, the twin sisters, and the excellence of the gingerbread. It became a fashion to go to Farwell street for buns and biscuits. Hetty and Delia had to work early and late to fill their orders, but what was that "to sewing their fingers off for a bare living?" Hetty said and toil was sweetened now by a gradually increasing profit. At the end of the first six months, they had not only "lived and kept together," but had a little sum laid by, which, as Aunt Polly advised, was treated as "business capital," part of it being invested in the purchase of an awning for the window, and an extra stove to increase their baking capacity. Very rarely were there any stale things left now to be sold next day at half price, the regular orders and chance custom consuming all.

"We shall have to hire a boy to carry things round, I actually believe," declared Hetty. "Mrs. Salcomb and Mrs Sayers both want our bread regularly, if we could send it."

"I've been expecting that would be the next step," remarked Aunt Polly, "and I guess I've got just the boy you want in my eye. It's widow McCullen's lad—Sandy, as they call him. He's a good little chap, and it'll be a real help to his mother to have him earning a trifle."

So Sandy McCullen was regurally engaged as "bread boy," and business grew brisker still.

"Aunt Polly, we've got to another notch," said Hetty at the end of the first year. "You don't happen to know of a girl, do you, who could help us in the baking? Delia and I can't keep up with the orders. She gets so tired every now and then that she can't sleep, and that worries me so that I lie awake too."

"That'll never answer; no, I don't know of any girl, but there's a nice kind of an oldish woman, if she'll do, that I'd like to recommend. Yes—I mean myself"—she went on chuckling at Hetty's amazed look. "It's come to me more than once lately, that it'd be kind of good and restful to make a change, and not go on tailorin' forever, all the rest of my days. I used to be a master hand at bread and pie-crust, too, when I was your age; and I've a little saved up which can go with the business, if it is needed; and if you girls say so, we'll make a kind of a family firm of the thing. How does it strike you?"

"Oh, Aunt Polly, the very thing, only it seems too good to be true. Do you really mean it? We did so hate the idea of a raw girl to whom we should have to teach everything, and who would spoil half she made for the first month, and I've fought it off as long as I could; why, it will be like grandmother coming back to have you living with us. There's the west room all ready. Dear me! How delightful things seem to turn out for us always!"

"That wasn't your view always, it seems to me," rejoined Aunt Polly. "A year ago you was pretty down in the mouth, if I don't mistake. Gingerbread is good for something, you see."

"The Old Time Bakery still goes in Farewell street, but it has grown far beyond its original proportions. If you were to visit it to-day you would find a room double the size of the former, and which has been made by taking down a partition wall between the sitting-room and a spare bed-room, and throwing them into one. There are two windows on the street now, one full of bread, biscuits and buns, the other stored with Hetty's now favorite gingerbread and with delicious-looking pumpkin pies and apple tarts, with old-fashioned flaky crusts, which are Aunt Polly's specialty, and have added greatly to the reputation of the establishment.

Still it is not a shop. Hetty, with very good taste, has scrupulously preserved the "quaint" look which first gave character in the little enterprise, and by judicious rummaging in neighbors' garrets, has acquired sundry old time chairs, bottles, jugs and platters, which help in the effect. Everything is scrupulously clean and bright, as all things must be where Aunt Polly supervises, but the brightest things in the room are the faces of the twin sisters. They have tested and proved their powers; they know now what they can do, and they taste the happiness of success.

I tell their little story, in which is nothing remarkable or out of the way, for the sake of other girls, who, perhaps, are sitting to-day with folded hands, and puzzling and wondering, just as Hetty and Delia did, over what they are to do and how to set about it. I do not mean at all that these girls should all make gingerbread—that indeed would be "over-stocking the market," as Aunt Polly would say, but only that they should hearken to a word of wisdom, "find out what they can do best, and do that," whatever it is. Secure that good work, and hearty striving will win some measure of success soon or late, even if its beginnings are small and insignificant as a gingerbread loaf or a patch of biscuit. —Congregationist.

PLAIN TRUTHS

The blood is the foundation of life, it circulates through every part of the body, and unless it is pure and rich, good health is impossible. If disease has entered the system the only sure and quick way to drive it out is to purify and enrich the blood.

These simple facts are well known, and the highest medical authorities agree that nothing but iron will restore the blood to its natural condition; and also that all the iron preparations hitherto made blacken the teeth, cause headache, and are otherwise injurious.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will thoroughly and quickly assimilate with the blood, purifying and strengthening it, and thus drive disease from any part of the system, and it will not blacken the teeth, cause headache or constipation, and is positively not injurious.

Saved his Child.

Gents:—Upon the recommendation of a friend I tried BROWN'S IRON BITTERS as a tonic and restorative for my daughter, whom I was thoroughly convinced was wasting away with Consumption. Having lost three daughters by the terrible disease, under the care of eminent physicians, I was loth to believe that anything could arrest the progress of the disease, but, to my great surprise, before my daughter had taken one bottle of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, she began to mend and now is quite restored to former health. A fifth daughter began to show signs of Consumption, and when the physician was consulted he quickly said "Tonics were required;" and when informed that the elder sister was taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, responded "that is a good tonic, take it."

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS effectually cures Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Weakness, and renders the greatest relief and benefit to persons suffering from such wasting diseases as Consumption, Kidney Complaints, etc.

THE CONVICT'S FRIEND.

Yes, I'm Sykes—Bill Sykes, burglar. That's my business, burglin' is, an' I don't care who knows it. The perlice all knows it an' they respects me accordin.' I don't wear no uniform, I don't, an' I don't give myself away with no thieves' talk. I talks like an English gentleman, I does. I've been pretty nigh thirty years in the perfession—not countin' time I've done, which ain't much 'cause I've got perlitical friends 'mong the nobs, yer know. I don't go up for long, I doesn't, and when I does go up I don't stay for as long a time as I goes for. I never got down so low as I couldn't employ counsel—I allers has the best ter be had. Not as I cares much about Sing Sing or Orbin, leastways the latter, where the company is good, an' where you gets what you pays for every time. This ain't no puff for the warding; he don't need none—he's got friends enough among the conwick's. He ain't goin' to be hard on a conwick as long as he's got money. He knows a gent when he sees 'im.

Talk about Matilda Filbert bein' the Conwick's friend! She ain't nowhere side o' them wardings. She does what she can for us—an' many of us would would have to give up our noble perfeshion but for her. But Lor' bless you, she ain't got the resources to back her, like a warding in good and reg'lar standin'. He's got the whole state to back 'im up: then he has his sel'ry, an' a bloomin' good trade with conwicks, an' tips from the contractors. A good warding as knows how to keep an open hand and one eye shut; he's got a soft place, an' he's the man as ought to be called the prisoner's friend. The contractor's and conwick's friend.——that's what I calls 'im!

Now there's Matilda Filbert; you was arskin' about 'er. Well, Tildy—she's a bloomin' lass, an' she is for a fact the conwick's friend. I was one of them that the papers told on the other day that was goin' to crack that ere crib in Chicago. We was put up to it by starwation, we was. It was starwation—over my left shoulder. I was starvin' for a dimin pin for a girl I know'd on, an' I was hungery for some o' the specie that was hid in that ere house. But there wasn't no five or six of us. We doesn't go round in fiveses or sixes—"wanishin' in the darkness." We ain't that fresh. Tildy'd ought to have consulted some perfeshional afore she made such a mistake as that. Now the fact of it is, when my friend tried that lock an' somebody said, "Who's there?" we did go away. We generally go away when anybody says, Who's there?" Sometimes we goes away if we even hear folks walkin' round. We doesn't generally stop an' say: "I'm a burglar; won't you please stop an' shoot at me!" We didn't know as 'twas Tildy Filbert—an' we didn't care whether 'twas her or some other female. We just got away. The next day I saw that Tildy said it was her; and that was the first time I ever heard of 'er.

An' I wasn't that feller as went back next mornin.' We don't go back next mornin' to 'pologize—especially when we aint done nothin' the night afore. What cove it was as went back I don't know. He must have been precious green, whoever he was. But wot taffy he did give Tildy! 'Twasn't no burglar in good standin' that went back; an' there's just where 'tis—the profeshion is all running to seed—there's so many impostors an' amatoors; we'd ought to have a 'sociation, we had. It is them impostors as goes foolin' round Tildy—and she'll stand a good deal of foolin' round, she will. Still, Tildy does what she can, an' there aint a burglar but knows where he can get a $5 bill when he's broke. Many a stock o' burglar's tools has been taken out o' pledge with Miss Tildy's $5.

One time I met Jim Bigger down in Chatham square, lookin' all down in the mouth, an' I sez to him:

"Wotever is the matter with you, Jim?" sez I; "you looks as solemn as a hearse on a wet day."

"Broke," sez Jim.

"So be I," sez I.

"Wot ever shall we do?" sez he.

"We couldn't think of nothin' but to go an' drownd ourselves in the flowin' bowl. So we went to a schooner shop to knock down a couple o' glasses o' beer. While we was a-waitin' for a chance to slip out quiet, Jim, he bein' a scholar like me—he ketches up a newspaper kind o' casual like, and begins a-readin'. Pretty soon he comes to a harticle headed "The Criminal's Friend."

"That's wot I'm lookin' for," sez Jim.

"An' me too," sez I. So we reads the harticle, an' we finds out how Tilda Filbert was givin' away five dollars to the lads, an' silk pocket-handkerchers an' seal rings an' such like tokens of 'fection. So us takes down the address an' we goes to her. We told her we was burglars, an' would like to get started.

"Have you been incarcerated?" sez Tildy.

"If you means the penitentiary, I pleads guilty," sez I. "I've been in a consider'ble. I confess it to my shame, an' I 'ope 'ereafter I won't be so blamed ork'ard."

"Where were you?" asked Tildy.

"Orbin," sez I.

"The dungeon! the black dungeon!" said Tildy, rollin' up her eyes like a play actress. "It ought to be razed to the ground; one stone ought not to be left atop of another."

"Yes, mum," says I; "you're right. I've often heard them sentiments expressed inside; you be indeed the conwick's friend."

"You poor, poor man!" she said; "you are a wictim to society. You ain't understood. What I want to have the state do for every prisoner is to give him a snug little home in the country, a garden and a few acres of land, a horse and a cow, and the comforts of life. Wot I would do to prevent crime is to give every conwick a settled income, so that he might be a honest man for life. There are 10,000 criminals in New York state. Let the state appropriate for each $1,000 per annum—wot is $10,000,000 to a state like this? Then you could all go and live good and honest lives. The state forces you to be a criminal, does it not, sir?"

"It do indeed," sez I.

"Sit down, my poor man," sez she. "I'd die for the prisoners."

"Thank you, mum; but before you do it would you please give me an' Jim here $5 each to buy some tapes and buttins, ez we want to peddle 'em 'mong the first families up-town"—an' I kind o' winked at Jim.

"Cert'nly, my poor, poor man. I have given away my all, but I can borrow something for you," an' she turned to a vener'ble old man as was in the room an' sez: "Could you lend me a hundred dollars to help this poor man who wan's to return to their places in society?"

"Cert'nly," he said; anything to help along your noble work," an' he gave her a hundred dollar bill.

We wanted to go out an' change it for the dear creature, but she called her secretary an' sent 'em out—a weak-minded lookin' fellow that come back in a few minutes and brought the change. She handed the $10, to divide between Jim and me, and I thanked her and started to go.

"Stay, my friend," said Tildy; "You must take a turkey and a frosted cake, and you, poor dear man, I see you have no watch an' chain. Oh, the cruelty of this state!" An' she took a watch an' chain from a drawer an' holdin' it out, sez: "Here, take this, my friend, you might be tempted to steal one."

"I took it, an' as we passed out a colored boy gave us a turkey, and a plum-cake with a cupid on top, and when we got into the street Jim sez: "Here's a lark!" an' we didn't lose no time in gettin' us a kit of tools, and cracked a snug little job that very night. She'd ought to be called "the conwick's friend," she had!

An' t'at day after she'd given us the money, we put up a party o'nine other lads to go and get that other $90; they wasn't all conwicks, 'cept by proxy, but some of 'em is a trainin', an' may come reg'lar into the profeshion. They was tempo'ry conwicks, so to speak. Many's the man Tildy has 'elped to set up in bizness. The perfeshion 'd ought to take up a collection for her, now she's broke; an' set her agoin' agin—turn about is fair play.

Wot do I think of Miss Tildy Filbert's plan to form a colony o' ex-conwics out west? Wot do I think 'twould be a hexalent idee. All the pals o' mine like that sort o' thing! We goes out to Western Hostralia for fun—some on of us does! We like these ,er conwic colonies? No, friend, that's all taffy, too. When you see one o' the noble horder o' 'ousebreakers you won't be likely to find many green spots in his eyes. We may make mistakes sometimes, but we ain't so luscious fresh as to want to go west on that lay. An' when you find the territory as wants 200,000 acres o' ex-conwics —you come round an' tell me. Ex-colonies we ain't appreciated.

Yes—we're all friends o' Tildy Filber's —an' she's a friend o' ours. May she live long an' prosper! Wot she says is all true. I know that, cos I'm one of that "unnumbered army" wot she ain't go no record of—I be. I wish there was more like her. Many a man would be kept out o' prison if there was. She does powers o' good to them as wants to go out o' the perfeshion, and more to them as wants to stay in it—like.

Yours truly, W. SYKES.
The Warding's Friend.

Choice Miscellany.

If one desires to pursue a profitable, and, at the same time, an easy branch of agriculture, he is advised to betake himself to Jamaica and raise bananas. With a big iron hoe he can clear the ground and dig a hole; with a slight muscular effort he can plant the sucker, and then leave the plant to nature. If he succeeds in keeping off thieves he can gather his crop and sell it profitably at 50 cents a bunch all the year round.

That monarch of the seas, the Great Eastern, is lying idle at Milford Haven, Eng., not only eating its head off but consuming itself generally. The despairing owners have offered her at auction and begged for proposals for a charter for the gigantic craft, but all to no purpose.

Whisky traffic at Boice City, I. T., must be rather brisk, even for a western town. A public-spirited man there proposes that he is given the exclusive right to sell spirituous liquors in that town, he will agree to pay the indebtedness of the city and school districts, and forever keep up a first-class public school sufficient to educate all the children, pay a good liberal salary to every preacher for every church in the city, and build a new church every five years. He expects to become a millionaire himself besides.

Lieutenant Governor John M. Hamilton of Illinois, who will shortly succeed to the governorship, will be the youngest chief executive the state has ever had. He is in his 35th year and is a native of Ohio. He has served one term as state senator and two years as lieutenant governor. He was a soldier in the army during the war of the rebellion, was subsequently a teacher and then became a lawyer. His law partner, Capt. Rowell, was elected to congress from the Bloomington districts last fall.

Among the more than a hundred temples in Canton, China, is one called the "Temple of Five Genii." Chinese tradition says that away back 300 years before Christ one day five genii came riding through the air on five rams. They stopped on the spot where Canton now stands, and said to the people who stood there: "May famine never visit your markets." After delivering this benediction the five genii departed, but the five rams were turned to stone. This temple contains the images of the five genii, and preserves the five stone rams. The old name for Canton is "City of Rams."

It may be a fact not known to all readers that the order of free masons exists in China, and counts its "lodges" by hundreds and its members by thousands in that far-off heathen empire. A correspondent of the Companion was at Denver, Colorado, recently, and saw there a Chinese funeral in which the masonic emblems were seen blending in curious brotherhood with the mortuary ceremonial of the Celestial kingdom. The correspondent says that "Chin Pin Quok," a Chinaman, of the mandarin class, living at Denver in exile from his country, had died of typhoid fever. His fellow-country-men were burying him with the pageant due to his rank, and with the honors of a mason in good standing.

The famous blue laws of Connecticut, enacted by "the people of the Dominion of New Haven," were so called because printed on blue paper. They prohibited the ceremony of marriage being performed by a parson, on the strange ground that a magistrate might perform it with less scandal to the church. Adultery was punished by death. Wearing clothes trimmed with gold, silver or lace above one shilling a yard involved a tax on the person's estate of $15. "No one to cross a river on the Sabbath but authorized clergymen. No one shall travel, cook, make beds, sweep houses, cut hair, or shave on the Sabbath. No one shall kiss his or her children on the Sabbath or fasting days. The Sabbath day shall begin at sunset Saturday."

At a donation party, a Methodist pastor refused the proffered money because, against his previous protest, the young people engaged in kissing games. He writes to the Christian Advocate to ask whether he might properly have avoided the sacrifice. The editor replies that donation parties are sure to bring together romping boys and hoydenish girls, and unless the pastor is a gentleman and his wife a lady and some of the influential members are persons of piety and good manners, the tone of the church is certain to be lowered. In some parts of the country disgraceful things occur, such as hugging, kissing, dancing, and rough skylarking. If the pastor is to receive the proceeds, he cannot be indifferent to the conduct of those who form the party, unless when all is over they come to a better mind and acknowledge that this had been a wrong act. In that case he can take the money.

Supreme Court Etiquette.

Washington Correspondence Philadelphia Press.

I happened to drop into the United States Supreme Court the other day, and there met a distinguished Philadelphia lawyer. He was in the blackest and shiniest of broadcloth from his head to his heels. He had in his hand a tall hat, a small black necktie encircled the whitest of collars, and his general appearance suggested a funeral. As this gentleman (I dare not name him) is somewhat noted for his rather flashy attire, I could not exactly understand what was the matter especially as he had no crape on his hat. He noticed me eyeing him, and asked what was the matter. I told him he looked more like a Baptist preacher than a Philadelphia lawyer. "Oh," he answered quickly, "It's this d——d court. I hate these clothes, and at home I never wear anything but grays or stripes or plaids, or bright neckties, but the last time I had a case in this court I was not allowed to make my argument because I wore a short, speckled coat and trousers, with a blue necktie. I was told that I was not properly dressed to appear before this court, and that I must wear black clothes. I have another case here now, and so you see I am dressed in this outlandish style. But I shall charge this suit to my client, and when I get home I'll have my wife put these things away in camphor and mark them "supreme court."

Upon inquiry I found, what I never knew before, that the supreme court forbids lawyers to wear within its bar anything but black. The weather may be as hot as the region toward which all of us sinners are tending, but no grateful seersucker or linen duster or white duck is permissable. The nine old duffers in easy chairs may nod and snooze and have their ease, but you must dress in black. It is probably right for certain forms and ceremonies are necessary, and the dignity of the court must be maintained.

Kissing in Public.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

During the holidays of last week the town of Talbottom was visited by a couple, composed of one gentleman and lady, for the purpose of getting married. About ten o'clock they entered our efficient ordinary's office and made their business known, and at once Mr. R. H. Leonard made them "man and wife." After the ceremony they at once proceeded to their conveyance, a one-horse wagon, and partook of their food, which they had prepared for the occasion. During their stay of about an hour the town was attracted by their affectionate love for one another. It was an enjoyable occasion, and the young and old enjoyed a hearty laugh. Seeing that their animal was not hitched to the vehicle they occupied, some of our kind young men rendered their services and finally got them off. As they started the lady raised from her rosy cheeks a large veil and threw her arms around her husband, and he immediately let go the reins that guided the animal and such another kissing and hugging never was seen in our town before. The town was in such an uproar of laughter that the large number of guests at the Thornton House, ladies and all, were attracted, and soon the large portico was lined with people full of laugh, but that did not stop the newly-married couple.

Long Ways for Water.

There has been talk of taking water from Lake Winnipesaukee for the supply of Boston. New York has had brought to its attention a scheme for going a greater distance, and obtaining its water from the Adirondack region. It is said that the estimated outflow from the 2700 square miles of territory so named is 41,000,000,00 cubic feet, or an average of 300,000,000,000 gallons per day. This is the purest water, and some of the streams and lakes are upwards of four thousand feet above tide level. The plan is to build a canal running along east of the Hudson River, and supplying Albany, Troy, Poughkeepsie and other places along the route. When Boston taps the lake for water, New York will probably do the same thing for the Adirondacks.

FIELD AND FARM.

Farming Notes.

A writer in an exchange says that as the country grows older and more densely populated, and the people poorer we shall have less grain and more vegetables for food, less pork and more mutton. Give us the mutton.

It is stated, and with good claims, that sunflowers will absorb malaria and render marshy tracts helthful. One point cannot be disputed the seeds form a good addition to the winter feed of chickens, owing doubtless to the oil they contain.

George Gay, who died poor near Wheatland, Oregon, recently, was once the richest man in the Northwest. His herds of cattle roamed over what are now the populous counties of Yamhill and Polk and in 1813 he built the first brick house in Oregon.

At the left wing of Sir Henry Peck's nearly completed house at Rousdon, Devon, is situated the dairy, which for beauty, solidity and originality of design has never been surpassed, and cannot be matched in all England. The floors and shelves and center-tables are all of slabs of the purest marble, and in the centre there is a fountain, the spray of which lends a delightful coolness to the air and Arcadian beauty to the scene. There are depicted on blue china tiles, arranged in a continuous chain all around the apartment, scenes from every phase of rural life. There is also a magnificent marble fountain in the large yard beyond. —English Live Stock Journal.

Lima beans, like onions, are an exception to the general rule that requires rotation in farm crops. Isaac Eyre stated at a Pennsylvania agricultural society's meeting, recently, that the Landreths have raised Limas on the same ground for many years with much the same experience as results from raising onions in the same way.

Sunsets Outdone in Satin.

From the Globe's Report of the Tiger Ball.

Gleaming through the shifting scene, a point of color that at once attracted at the eye and held it, because of its unique beauty and grace, was a costume combining a petticoat of flame-red satin and corsage and long train in plain, severe folds or garnet velvet. Another dress which called forth from the lookers-on much comment of various kinds might have been the creation of a color-loving artist. It was a sunflower yellow tarletan, with much gauzy drapery held in place with garlands of deep red poppies.

"What does the dress mean?" was queried, for it was evident that the dark, brilliant beauty who wore it intended that it should symbolize something.

"An October day," was the unhesitating reply of the lady addressed. "An October sunset, with its pure golden light and deep, rich colors."

"Then, if that is case," said the first speaker, "that tall and slender lady must have had the thought of an April day in her mind when she ordered that dress."

And the costume did speak of the changing skies, the tender, uncertain colors of early spring, as plainly as it is in the power of silk and satin to speak. The color was a soft, pale green, with a suggestion of yellow in it, like the green of early spring, only softer and paler. The style of making was rather simple, but looping the drapery in the back, crossing over and almost lost in the puffing of the right panier and falling carelessly across the front was a garland of violets. There were small clusters of violets fastening a loop or a fold here and there and a large corsage bouquet of the same dainty flower completed a pretty and suggestive toilet.

Window Flowers in Winter.

Many persons say, "How beautiful your window plants are. How can you make them bloom so much?" The whole story I herewith enclose; hope it may benefit some genuine flower lovers who are unacquainted with the best methods. Those of us who live where the mercury often falls far below zero, who have no green houses or conservatories, and who wish none, as we have but little time for flowers, would do well to content ourselves with a few hardy plants, such as will give us no trouble, much pleasure and serve to brighten the home. There is no use in beginning to consider this matter in the autumn; winter gardening must be commenced in the spring—the plants must be procured and cultivated during the summer, and such plans made as can easily be adopted when winter sets in. We have chrisanthemums, petunias, primroses, cyclamen, geraniums, callas, decorative foliage, sundries for hanging baskets, and ornamental vines. Some persons would add begonias, bouvardias, carnations, stevia, eupatorium and others to the list, but the first two require too high a temperature and the last two are so large that their room is better than their presence. Carnations are hardy; grow them or anything else that you can make a success without too much care and effor. Some five or six kinds, however, are enough.

The crowing excellence of our hardy winter garden is an abundance of good geraniums, presenting as they may pure white, all shades of red from the faintest rose to the brightest scarlet or deep crimson, while some variegated sorts, like Mark Twain, or Mrs. James Vick, are specially adapted to this use. It is said that bloom depends on culture more than kind, but my observation is to the contrary. Nothing, however, will bloom in winter without thorough preparation. Young geraniums designed for this should be planted in the ground in spring, that they may make a large growth. Raise them carefully and pot them in September, thus they will become established and eager for bloom as soon as the indoor garden is started. If pruning is necessary do it early, and do not cut off the blooming points toward autumn; allow none or very little bloom in the summer. Use small pots and rich soil; if the plants are healthy they will dry out rapidly, and require frequent watering. Of vines, baskets, foliage, etc., I will write at another time.—N. Y. Tribune.

Poultry in Vermont.

C. L. H. writes: "Last winter I had about three dozen eggs a week from 22 hens; in February they commenced laying briskly, and from the first of April until October averaged eight dozen a week. These were from white Leghorns the second year. I gave them warm mush in the morning, made of what is termed provender, boiling water poured on it and stirred until it was pasty. This they relished immensely, and when they had consumed sufficient to have satisfied a cow they would beat a call for more with their bills on the bottom of the empty pans. I notice that Leghorns select corn from all other feed given them. The thermometer has ranged this winter from zero to 12 degrees below, yet my hens have endured it well; yet my coop is not boarded closely. In the summer time I remove the outside, which allows full circulation through the upright rails of which it is composed. A brood of little chickens is the best exterminator of insects, but you must look sharp for cats that have kittens."

Feed of Cow Before and After Calving.

As the period of calving approaches the cow's system becomes much disturbed and the circulation is considerably increased. The animal is taxed to the utmost to supply the blood needed for the development of the calf, and while in this condition a very slight cause, such as a cold or indigestion from overfeeding, may do a great deal of mischief. It is therefor dangerous to feed grain to a cow for several weeks before calving. Nothing is required except good hay, with a few roots or two quarts of chopped potatoes daily; no meal whatever should be given. A bran slop should be given only when required as a laxative, and then a dose of two ounces of Epsom Salts should be mixed with it. Feeding grain stimulates the milk organs unduly and very frequently produces garget or congested udder. It is a great mistake to try to produce a large development of udder in the hope of obtaining a large milk yield afterwards. An hour so after calving a pailful of bran slop with four ounces of Epsom salts and a handful of salt dissolved in it, will allay any feverish symptoms that may appear. It is advisably to greatly reduce or totally withhold feed from twelve to twenty-four hours after calving, only water with a handful of bran stirred in it should be given. Then there may be fed one peck of raw roots, two quarts of wheat or rye bran and two quarts of corn meal with all the good hay she will eat. For the first few days wet the meal in warm water to drink.—Cleveland Leader.

The Frosty Bit.

The horse is subjected to unnecessary pain, if not to permanent injury, at this season of the year by the thoughtless placing of a cold iron bit in his mouth. If any one doubts that this is painful to the horse, let him satisfy himself by laying a piece of frosty iron across his own tongue some sharp morning. It is a very easy matter to keep the bridle in the house where it will keep warm, when not in use. We have seen horses the skin of whose tongue and lips was an effectually burned by a frosty bit as they would have been by a red-hot one, and all the while the owners were wondering why the animals refused to eat and fell off in flesh.—[New England Farmer.

A FEW MYSTERIES.

They are Accounted for by the Explosive Medicines now in Use.

From the New York Times.

Explosive as nitro-glycerine is known to be, it is far inferior to power to many other explosives. Among the new additions to the materia medica are several, which, though harmless when mixed with anything else, may form frightfully explosive compounds when mixed with some other remedy. For example, chlorate of potash and glycerine form an explosive comparison with which nitro glycerine is tame and harmless. Now, it often happens that a person after gargling his throat with glycerine swallows a chlorate of potash lozenge. It is then for him to experience a slight concussion, such as is produced when a man accidentally stumbles and strikes a lamppost, for an explosion to follow. Tincture of iodine is also frequently applied to the interior of the throat of a patient, who soon afterward gargles his throat with a solution of ammonia. This forms a compound even more explosive than that formed by chlorate potash and glycerine, so explosive, in fact, that the vibration of the throat caused by an effect to speak will result in an explosion. As to hypophosphite of lime and oxide of silver, either of those will occasionally explode spontaneously and when unmixed with anything else. And yet it is probable that hundreds of people swallow these explosives every day in the year.

Any one of the explosives just mentioned explodes with such violence as to reduce the receptacle in which it is exploded to an impalpable powder. Curiously enough, such explosives are rarely accompanied with any great noise, unless the explosives are placed in contact with some substance as rigid as iron or granite. A single scruple of oxide of silver placed in the waistcoat of a fat man, and exploded by percussion makes a report no louder than that caused by clapping the hands, but it destroys the fat man so completely that not the slightest particle of him can ever be discovered except by a chemical analysis of the atmosphere. This simple experiment, which can be tried by any person who has a fat friend, will be more conclusive as to the effect of oxide of silver when exploded than any amount of explanation could be.

We now see what becomes of the men who mysteriously disappear. They are men who have taken some explosive medicine. A slight shock, such as a collision with a small boy, or an umbrella carried under the arm of some heedless pedestrian, causes the medicine to explode, and the report is slight and the disappearance of the victim so instantaneous and complete that the whole affair passes unnoticed.

Let the doctors look into this matter. It is one which closely concerns their prosperity. If they are to have the good will and assistance of undertakers and the confidence of the public generally, they must prescribe no more explosive medicines.

In a Blizzard.

If poor, infirm, weak Lear had ever encountered a Nebraska blizzard, he would not have defied it with, "Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks! Rage! Blow!" A reader gains but a faint idea of such a storm even from the following sketch of one, which a correspondent of the Ohio State Journal experienced:

Our road was a mere track acros the wild prairie. At long intervals was a dug out, or sod-house, which if not abandoned, gave evidence of habitation.

The wind soon increased to a fearful gale, and was laden with pellets of ice and snow that, striking the face, could hardly be endured.

"What do you think of this storm, driver?" I asked.

"I have seen them before, and as long as I know where we are, I am not afraid," he replied.

The fury of the storm increased, and the horses that struggled bravely forward now stopped and turned around.

"I don't know where I am," shouted the driver.

What! Merciful heavens! Are we lost in this storm? My breath grew short and my heart beat loud.

Written in ink in a memoranda book in my pocket, was my name and address. Some one would likely find it; and the clue to fate and idenity would be established.

There comes a snow-cloud swift as a shadow. The wagon top that we held by united strength for protection was wrenched from our hold and carried away as a plaything.

A rick of prairie hay, standing leeward, was blown on us and over us and away with the storm.

"Whip the horses for life, driver," we shouted, and we turned to go with the storm. In less distance than a mile we reached a dug-out. Thank heaven! It was a refuge, and more dead than alive, we staggered in at the door.

Fortunately it was inhabited, and the hospitable inmates did everything in their power for our relief. The driver's face and my own were badly frosted, and the ears of my companion frozen hard.

THE GOOD OLD WAY.

John Mann had a wife who was kind and true—
A wife who loved him well;
She cared for the house and their only child;
But if I the truth must tell,
She fretted and pined because John was poor,
And his business was slow to pay;
But he only said, when she talked of charge,
"We'll stick to the good old way?"

She saw her neighbors were growing rich
And dwelling in houses grand;
That she was living in poverty,
With wealth upon every hand;
And she urged her husband to speculate,
To risk his earnings at play;
But he only said, "My dearest wife,
We'll stick to the good old way."

For he knew that the money that's quickly got
Is the money that's quickly lost;
And the money that stays is the money earned
At honest endeavors cost.
So he plodded along in his honest style,
And he bettered himself each day,
And he only said to his fretful wife,
"We'll stick to the good old way."

And at last there came a terrible crash,
When beggary, want and shame
Came down on the homes of their wealthy friends,
While John's remained the same;
For he had no debts and he gave no trust—
"My motto is this," he'd say—
"It's a charm against panics of every kind
'Tis stick to the good old way?"

And his wife looked round on the little house
That was every nail their own,
And she asked forgiveness of honest John
For the peevish mistrust she had shown,
But he only said, as her tearful face
Upon his shoulder lay!
"The good old way is the best way wife,
We'll stick to the good old way."

LADY LAYTON'S TRAVELS.

How an Austrian Soldier Became the Secretary of an Adventuress—The Social Hero of the Day in Vienna.

Correspondence of the Philadelphia Times.

For the past few days the society lion has been a Hungarian actor named Louis Radesky, who gained his distinction not on account of his talent before the footlights, but owing to the hair-breadth escapes and strange vicissitudes of fortune that have befallen him since he last left Vienna. In the year 1870 Radesky was an actor who enjoyed great popularity in the different provinces along the Danube, but tiring of his roving life he entered the army as a hussar. He joined the regiment of Radesky, which was then garrisoned in a small town named Pardubiz, within a few miles of this city. He was of rather slim build, and owing to that fact, when entering the regiment he was jeered at by a corporal who was the acknowledged bully of the regiment. Being unacquainted all the time with military life, Radesky politely informed the man that size was not a criterion of bravery.

A duel with swords was decided upon, and they met. If the corporal had imagined that he could gain an easy victory he was greatly mistaken, as Radesky's stage training had familiarized him with the use of the sword, and this training came in good stead on this occasion. He disarmed the bully three times in succession and finally gave him a thrust through the shoulder that necessitated his removal to the hospital, where he remained for six weeks. After this display of skill our actor was molested no more, but, on the contrary, he gained the respect and esteem of his comrades through several acts of bravery, notably the rescue of a whole family from a burning building when the military had been called out to assist the firemen who were powerless. Nothing is more admired than bravery in the army, and these feats on his part gained Radesky the good will of his officers, who often allowed him the privileges generally denied to a soldier. To parade the streets in "mufti" or citizens' clothes is strictly forbidden in the Austrian army, but Radesdy's officers closed their eyes to this rule when they perceived a well-dressed, well-bred citizen who at roll call answered to the name of Private Radesky.

Radesky one day got the usual leave of absence for forty-eight hours, and ridding himself of his splendid white-breasted uniform, he donned a civilian's suit that was conveniently awaiting him in a small house situated a few hundred yards from the barracks. Little did he think he had taken off his badge of servitude for the last time. With a sense of relief, he walked with a hurried step toward town. Thinking over his strange lot in life, he was gently sauntering the Tabor strasse in Vienna, when the frightened screams of the people around him attracted his attention. Two horses were dashing at a headlong speed down the street, dragging after them a barouche, in which a lady was seated. She was screaming for some one to stop the horses, that had been frightened and were tearing away at a breakneck pace. The light carriage struck against a projecting stone near the curb, when Radesky came to the rescue. Without a moment's hesitation he rushed across the street just in time to catch the horses by the head, who, checked in their mad course, reared and plunged so much that the brave man's life was for sometime in great danger. As soon as he was freed from his dangerous position Radesky climbed to the carriage where the lady had fainted; and, stepping into the vehicle, he did all in his power to revive the occupant, who he perceived was a beautiful noble woman. His efforts were soon crowned with success, and the most tender black eyes in the world beamed forth gratitude for the owner's deliverance from peril.

As soon as she could speak she told her brave preserver that her name was Lady Layton, and that she was passing through Vienna on a tour of the world. She would have told more had not Radesky swooned from the pain received from his injuries.

Lady Layton immediately drove the now pacified and obedient horses to her hotel, where she gave orders for Radesky's comfort. For several days he was in a bad state, as the kick from the horse proved to be excessively painful if not dangerous, but these days were happy ones to him, as he was watched over day and night by Lady Layton. The thought never entered his mind of returning to barricks, but if he forgot his duty, the colonel did not, and on the fourth day of his accident, a provost guard made its appearance at his bedside. They only relinquished their object of bringing him back fettered as a deserter, when the reason of his absence had been explained and the doctor had given a certificate showing that removal would prove dangerous to the patient. Radesky acknowledged to Lady Layton that he was tired of military life and would give much to be free.

The lady immediately set about procuring his discharge from the army. She successively went to the colonel of his regiment, who refused to sanction such a step, and in sheer despair Lady Layton applied for an audience of the Austrian minister of war, through the English consul, who, touched at her evident sorrow and previous ill-success, granted her the honorable discharge of the soldier. She returned to her prisoner with the joyful tidings, and they talked over his future movements. Radesky wished to return to his profession as an actor, but Lady Layton proposed that he should accompany her in her travels as a private secretary. After much hesitation Radesky accepted this position, and within a few days of the accident they were speeding toward Paris. Lady Layton hastened away from the French capital with an impatience which surprised the soldier secretary. London, Berlin and, in fact all the European cities of note were visited, and from Marseilles they crossed the Mediterranean to Egypt, where they traveled as great personages. Her title gave Lady Layton the entree of all the best "salons," and her secretary fared quite well. When they had tired of the marvelous sights of the Holy Land, they left Egypt and turned their course toward India. Bombay society always on the alert, made much fuss over the travelers and they were received equally well in Calcutta, where they created quite a a furore amongst officers of the English regiments stationed there. In every town where they remained Lady Layton could bear none but the best hotels.

China and Japan were visited, and after their beauties and attractions were exhausted Lady Layton took steamer with her secretary for San Francisco. After a pleasant journey they reached the Golden City quite safely. She seemed excessively nervous, probably on account of such a long sea voyage, and decided to land after all the other passengers had disembarked. When the bustle and confusion of the arrival had subsided Lady descended the gangway, but had hardly touched terra firma when a quiet looking gentleman advanced quickly toward her and placing his hand familiarly upon her shoulder, said: "Lenora Price, I arrest you, and hereby is my warrant!" Radesky was thunderstruck and had scarcely moved a pace when an officer walked up and arrested him. "What does this mean?" said our actor, quite at a loss to understand such proceedings. "It means," said the man, "that we have just arrested the celebrated Leonora Price, alias Lady Layton, who a short time ago stole 300,000 francs from Mr. Mackay, the bonanza king, in Paris, and we have at last tracked her here."

Radesky was taken before a magistrate, but was released when it was proved that he was innocent of the charge preferred against him, whilst his less fortunate "employer" suffered the penalty of her wrong doing. Radesky, after moving over the globe, sometimes as a porter, doing all kinds of odd jobs for a living, he has reached Vienna; from Otago in New Zealand.

Personalites.

The widow of Joseph Smith, the Mormon martyr, who was, after his death, "sealed" to Brigham Young, is still living in Salt Lake City, vigorous and healthy at the age of 79, and an ardent advocate of the plurality of wives system.

Col. William Preston Johnson, son of the late Gen. Albert Sidney Johnson, has resigned the Presidency of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Merchanical College at Baton Rogue, to assume the charge of the university to be established in New Orleans through the generosity of Mr. Paul Tulane, of Princeton, O. J. Col. Johnson was one of Gen. Robert E. Lee's assistants in rebuilding, reconstructing, and improving the old Washington College at Lexington, Va., now known as the Washington and Lee University.

On hearing that William Appleton had been nominated for Congress, Mr. Webster said, "He is the very best man who could be nominated. Boston should send commercial men to Congress; they are infinitely more useful than lawyers, and when Boston has been better represented than at any other time. Mr. Appleton will have more influence than a dozen lawyers."

Sergeant Boston Corbett, the man who killed the assassin of President Lincoln is living in Kansas, engaged in the cattle business. He has become a religious enthusiast, and in a recent letter to a friend in Camden, N. J., says that he had been directed by God to inflict daily corporal punishment upon himself as a penance for having taken human life. It is sad to think that the plucky sergeant has become the crank that this indicates.

Mme. Christine Nilsson, the singer, in an interview with a Cincinnati reporter recently, said, in answer to a question regarding her future home: "I have seriously contemplated making America my home, and may do so. I have no ties to bind me to Europe; but I despise the ocean. I never think of it on a ship but what I get deathly sick. If I come to America to live, no money can get me to cross the ocean again. I have every evidence of friendship from Americans and my own people, are Swedes, and think I should be very happy here."

Mr. William H. Case, now of Johnsville, enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-ninth New York Volunteers in April, 1864, when but 12 years and 9 months old, and served in Gen. Sherman's army through the rest of the war. Recently he got a letter from the good-natured general, in which he says it would take too much time and labor to test his claim to have been the youngest enlisted soldier, but adds: "I am willing to concede to you your claim, though we have in the regular army cases of soldiers born in the army who have been in it all their lives, enlisting as soon as possible, as, for instance, the two Clarks, of the Twenty-second Infantry. Still I am glad to see that you feel a just pride in such a claim of youthful action."

Rev. Henry L. Kendall, a native of this city and a graduate of Brown University in class of '71, died of consumption at Walpole, Mass., on Tuesday, aged 34 years. He was at one time a carrier of the Bulletin.

A young lady who is suffering from consumption sent to Mr. Gladstone on his birthday, which was also her own, a letter containing a bookmark, on which she had worked in silk, "The Bible our Guide." She received in return a box containing fruit and hot-house flowers, together with the following letter in Mr. Gladstone's handwriting: "I am greatly touched by your kindness in having worked a bookmark for me under the circumstances at which you glance in such feeling and simple terms. May the guidance which you are good enough to desire on my behalf avail you fully on every step of that journey in which, if I do not precede, I cannot but shortly follow you.

WHO IS LOVE?

Why, Love, my love, is a dragon-fly
That weaves by the beautiful river,
Where waters flow warm, where willows droop by,
Where lilies dip waveward and quiver,
Where stars of heaven they shine for aye,
If you take not hold of that dragon-fly,
By the musical, mystical river.

Let Love go his way; let the lilies grow
By that beautiful, silvery river;
Let tall tules nod; let noisy reeds blow;
Let the lilies' lips open and quiver;
But when Love may come or when Love may go,
You may guess and may guess, but you never shall know,
While the silver stars ride on that river.

But this you may know: If you clasp Love's wings,
And you hold him hard by that river,
Why, his eyes grow green, and he turns and he stings,
And the waters wax icy and shiver;
The waters wax chill and the silvery wings
Of Love they are broken, as broken heart-strings,
While darkness comes down on that river.

IN AN INN GARDEN.

"I remember the girl as if I had seen her yesterday," said Mme. Sophie R. "I do not know her history; I have never seen her again. But what I do know I will relate to you, since you wish to hear it."

Not far from the city of L. lies a little inn garden by a river. It is now some years since circumstances compelled me to spend a twelvemonth in L. I am not used to the life of a great city. I found little in it to please me; and it was with delight that I one day accidentally discovered this garden, to which I could go easily, in which I henceforward found myself again and again with pleasure. A quarter of an hour by train brought me to a small station, at which I alighted. A brief space of dusty high road then lay before me, still bearing traces of the adjacent city in mean houses, in ragged wayside weeds whitened by the dust or splashed by the mud raised by a hundred carts and wagons that daily lumbered along to the city gates, in frequent wine shops and a half-listless folk—in all the shabby life, lacking the characteristics of town and country alike, which clings about the outskirts of a great town. But a sudden turn brought me at once to a scene that had the charm of absolute peace among rural surroundings. A deep, winding lane ended in a quiet little inn, set between poplars and green hedges. Cocks and hens were forever pecking about the grass-grown threshold of the open door, or strayed into the passage that led through the house; ducks quacked and straggled to and from a shallow pond; pigeons cooed; the deep resonant bark of a chained house-dog announced every new comer. An atmosphere of homely country life, in short, lay about the whole place; it seemed to me a paradise of peace and sunshine and quiet that I had found when I first discovered the little inn in its sheltered nook.

I had visited it often through the long, hot summer; I had made friends with the cheerful hostess; I had dined there and sat through some long afternoons, reading and writing at one of the little green tables set out in shady corners. I even thought at one time of leaving the city altogether during these sultry months, and of establishing myself at my little inn; a fresh white curtain swaying to and fro in an upper casement seemed to promise an equally fresh interior; a cool retreat with a verdant prospect of trees and green-shadowed water. But on reflection I gave up this idea. I feared to miss part of the charm of my garden in becoming familiar with it, in losing the sense of contrast between the hot roads and its leafy freshness by bringing the dusty cares of every-day life to desecrate this tranquil nook, devoted hitherto to leisure and enjoyment. One grows an epicure in these matters, I find, as one grows old; a naive pleasure, a fresh impression becomes a treasure to be hoarded, not recklessly used or flung aside after the careless fashion of youth. Therefore I resolved to stay in the city, and I was confirmed in this resolution by a certain Sunday afternoon excursion that I made to the little inn. Alighting from a crowded train and issuing from the station, I found the road lively with carts and public vehicles filled with young men and city maidens, and long before I reached my garden the sound of loud voices, of song and laughter, warned me of what I should find. I looked and fled. I did not grudge them the garden, heaven knows. It was I who was out of place. But, since it was quiet I had come to seek, I fled.

It was more than a week before I went again. I arrived early, and found, as was not unfrequently the case, that I had the garden to myself. It was drawing toward the end of the summer, and the mellow sunlight, the sense of ripeness in the air, gave, as I remember, an added sense of repose to the quiet spot. I had seated myself in my favorite corner; the hostess happened to be absent, but the little maid had served me my usual noonday meal of coffee and eggs; I had arranged my books and writing materials on the little table before me and on the bench at my side, and was looking forward to a long and peaceful afternoon, when two newcomers entered the garden and arrested my attention.

At the first glance, indeed, I took them to be merely such a bourgeois couple as sometimes strayed into the garden for breakfast, but a closer observation made me at once change my opinion. The man, who was tall, fair and handsome, was no bourgeois. His hands, in one of which he carried a pair of dogskin gloves, were white, with carefully kept nails, and a plain seal ring on one finger; his coat was well cut; he had an air of ease and good society. The girl, who was quite young, wore a neat pink cotton gown, rather faded in the wash, with a white muslin bow carefully tied under her linen collar; on her head, when she entered the garden, was a little white net bonnet with pink ribbon strings, a trifle faded, like her gown; but this she at once removed and hung on the branch of a tree, showing some thick twists of dark hair. She was slight, and she was also pretty, but more through coloring and expression, perhaps, than through feature; her cheeks had a charming natural bloom, set off by her pink gown; her eyes, which were small rather than large, shone with a brilliant, fitful light under their dark lashes; she had a determined, almost stubborn-looking mouth and chin, and not at all a classic face. Her hands, which were gloveless, were pale and smooth as those of city girls used to a sedentary life are wont to be, but neither well-shaped nor well-kept. On one finger she wore a little, cheap coral ring.

They had given their orders apparently on their way through the house, and sat down at one of the green tables to await the arrival of their meal. My presence did not seem to disturb them in the least; though, as they had placed themselves just opposite me, I was near enough to hear every word they said. Their conversation, in fact, was unintelligible to me, as it turned almost exclusively upon persons and incidents well known to both, with rapid passing allusions to one thing and another. It was the girl who talked most; leaning forward a little, her arms folded upon the table, she spoke with great vivacity; while her companion, lounging back in his chair, with his hands in his pockets, responded by an occasional word and nod. Now and then she sprang up and mimicked a gesture, a step, a movement; then, reseating herself, talked on as before. The restless gayety in her manner, in which there was no affectation and which yet seemed to me not altogether natural, contrasted with the immobility of her companion. She laughed a good deal, while he hardly took the trouble to smile. All the effort, all the exertion of the conversation, were on her side.

She paused at last in her eager talk, and sat silent for a moment, leaning back in her chair, her hands clasped behind her head, her bright eyes gazing before her; then jumping up, she began to flit about the garden with the half-springing step and inconsequent movements of a child. Espying a solitary flower on a climbing rose, one of the few roses which the garden produced, she sprang to get it and failed; it hung too high overhead. She desisted after one or two attempts, and the man, who had been watching her, slowly rose and went to the spot. He was tall, as I have said, more than a head taller than she was, and reached it without difficulty.

"Here is your rose," he said, holding it toward her.

She did not at once take the flower. She had torn her finger with a thorn, and was holding it in her mouth. "Give me your handkerchief," she said in a moment.

He drew a handkerchief from his pocket and gave it to her. It was a cambric one, with an initial embroidered in one corner. The girl took it; then, using her teeth as scissors, she cut the edge of the hem, tore off a long strip that included the initial and wound it around her finger.

"There!" she cried in a joyous voice. "Whoever embroidered that for you will never have her work used by you again."

"I have not an idea who worked it," he answered. "You, perhaps. One buys them by the dozen."

"I don't do embroidery," she said rather curtly. She took the rose from his hand. "This is mine!" she said. "Well, then I give to you. It was for you I wanted it."

So she put it in his button-hole and felt for a pin with which to fasten it securely, but could not find one. "No matter," she said, "it will hold. Now promise me one thing—that you will keep it always."

He looked down at the flower. "Always? This rose?" he said. "Do you know what a dead rose looks like? Like that"—picking one from the rose tree. "What on earth should I keep a thing like that for?"

She laughed, "Well, give me that," she said, snatching the dead rose from his hand and thrusting it inside her frock. "Now, we've each got one; and if I keep mine you might yours."

"I don't in the least want to keep it," he answered; "but do if you like. You're always sentimental, you know."

"I'm not; you know I'm not," she cried. "But I suppose one may have feelings."

"No, don't," he said, walking away toward the table again. This scene had passed so close to me, that I had inevitably heard every word that was spoken; and now, as her companion turned his back on her, I saw a look of pain that momentarily whitened her cheeks and lips come into the girl's face. She stood motionless, her brows drawn together, her fingers tightly interlaced, apparently struggling to master some almost overpowering passion or emotion. She succeeded. In another moment the blood came rushing back, her fingers unlocked; with a snatch of song and the same gay, springing step as before, she ran up the garden to meet the white-capped maid who was advancing with a tray.

"Here is our breakfast!" she cried. "And I am hungry. What have you ordered? Will there be a chocolate and galette and an omelet?"

They sat down together just within the shadow of one of the vine-covered berceaux, precisely opposite to where I still kept my seat and my book. Between us lay only the garden path, flooded by the hot mid-day sun. The girl interested me, and as it was they who had chosen their position opposite me, I found no indiscretion in keeping the seat I had previously held. Their repast lasted a long time. I observed, however, that while her companion made an excellent meal, the girl, who had declared herself hungry, touched hardly anything. All the delicacies she had desired appeared, and she allowed herself to be helped from each dish in turn; but she employed herself in feeding a cat and dog belonging to the inn, who had come and seated themselves one on either side of her. Her gay mood had changed a little; she talked less and looked more at her companion, who did not look much at her, but rather at the plates and dishes before him.

"We are extremely dull," he said at last, taking out his watch, "and we may have to spend an hour yet in this hot little hole of a garden. I shall go and order some champagne."

He rose as he spoke and walked away toward the inn. The rose, loosely fastened in his button-hole, fell out as he moved. He did not notice it, but the girl did. She picked it up, pressed it with a passionate gesture to her lips, then thrust it hurriedly inside the bosom of her frock, pressing both hands tightly over it with an energy that brought the varying color to her cheek with a rush. When her companion returned, she was idly tracing a design with her forefinger in some spilt red wine on the green table. He glanced down at his coat.

"Where is my rose?" he said.

"Have you lost it?" she answered without looking up.

"I suppose so—I had it a moment ago."

He looked down and about him on the dusty ground. She also turned slightly, and with the point of her shoe moved aside the leaves that clustered at the foot of the vine trellis. He resigned himself.

"You will have to get me another," he said.

"Never," she answered, leaning back in her chair with folded arms, and looking at him with a smile at once defiant and provoking. "I will never give you a rose again."

He shrugged his shoulders slightly. "As you will," he said, "I shall not die for want of a rose."

She looked at him for a moment in silence.

"Dio!" she said then. "I believe you will never die, unless it be of old age."

"Thank you for the prophecy," he said, laughing, "and may you prove a true prophet. Here; let us drink to your old age and mine."

The champagne had been brought; he filled a glass and passed it to her. She just touched it with her lips, then, springing to her feet, held it aloft, while in a clear, untaught voice she sang a drinking song, which an opera recently the fashion had made popular. Her companion, who was smoking, joined in the chorus with a lazy hum, watching the while, with half-closed eyes, the rings of smoke that he puffed into the air. She sang the song through; at the end, whether by accident or intention I do not know, the glass fell crashing to the ground.

"Bravo, bravo," said her companion. "Excellently well sung. But you have lost your wine."

He pushed his own glass toward her as he spoke. She took no notice of it, but dropping into her chair, sat with her elbows on the table, her chin propped on her hands, gazing before her into vacancy.

"Do you know what I should like better than anything in the world?" she said, suddenly turning to her companion.

"What?" he answered.

"To go once, only just once, to a box at the opera."

"Well, I will take you," he said.

"You will?" she cried eagerly. "Oh, when?"

"To-morrow night."

She sprang to her feet again, clapping her hands. "To-morrow night—do you mean really to-morrow night?"

"Certainly I mean it," he said. "I will take a box to-morrow, and call for you in the evening."

She stood looking at him, her hands clasped as though in ecstasy. All at once a shadow stole over her face.

"This dress," she said, looking down at it and lifting a frill, "it will not do—and it is the only one I have."

"Oh, it will do well enough," he answered carelessly; "Put a flower in your hair. You always look charming, you know."

"But I want to go to a large box," she said, her eyes widening a little, as with anxiety, "in the center of the house, where I can see every one and be seen."

"Yes, yes, I understand; but you will do very well. You can put a rose in your hair."

"The dead rose," she said with a laugh.

"What do you mean?" he said, frowning a little.

"Oh, nothing," she answered; "see here is some one come to speak to you."

She turned quickly round as she spoke the last words, and stood with her back to him, her hand pressed tightly on her heart. The little inn maid had approached once more to tell the gentleman that his horse and servant had arrived and were waiting.

"I must go," he said with a certain alacrity. He paid the bill that the maid had brought and rose.

"You don't mind staying here alone until the train goes?" he said as he buttoned up his coat and drew on his gloves.

"Not in the least, oh, not in the least," she answered; "It is only half an hour, you know."

"Then I will be off at once. I have no time to lose."

He took up his hat, but still lingered a moment, as though he hesitated to say some final word. It was she who spoke it.

"Till to-morrow evening, then," she cried in her clear, childish voice. "You will call for me?"

"Yes, yes; that is it," he said with an air of relief, and putting on his hat. "I will call for you."

They walked up the path together, she with her springing steps at his side. About half way up the garden she paused, and, without any formal farewell, apparently, allowed him to go on alone, while she stood, one hand shading her eyes, the other crossed on her heart, in a way that seemed habitual with her. He walked on up to the inn, but, before entering it, turned and looked back. Instantly the girl started from her attitude, waving and kissing both hands in a sort of joyous adieu, till he had turned again and passed out of sight. One minute longer she stood, while a sound of horses' hoofs could be heard retreating up the lane, fainter and fainter in the distance. Then she turned. Gropingly, as though blinded by the sunlight, she made her way to the table again and fell back in a chair as though she had been shot.

I thought she had swooned, so colorless was her face, so motionless her closed eyelids and loose, hanging hands. I went up to her and raised her head, which had fallen back against the wooden framework of the berceau. She had not fainted, for she roused herself at the touch and sat up, leaning forward, her head drooping a little, her arms straight and rigid, her hands tightly clasped like one in a paroxysm of anguish.

"Oh, I can't bear it—I can't bear it—" she said, as if the words were wrung from her.

"You are suffering. Can I not help you?" I said, trying to take one of her cold hands in mine. But she resisted the attempt, though I believe she was hardly conscious of my presence.

"Oh, I can't bear it—" she repeated with a moan. She sat motionless for a moment gazing before her with blank eyes. Suddenly she started to her feet, and stood with her face turned toward the inn. Her lips moved, but no words were audible. She made a step or two forward in the direction of the house, but her strength failed. She caught at the table to support herself, and sank back again in the chair in the same deathlike immobility, with the same deathlike pallor as before. Unable to guess the cause of her misery, I could yet divine by the reaction now, by this utter prostration, what the last hour had cost her. The wine still stood on the table. I poured out a glass and held it to her lips. She tasted it, then sat up and drank it eagerly. It revived her, if only to a keener anguish; it gave her the power and the will to speak.

"I never wished him good-bye," she said, in heart-broken accents. "I might have said one word, and now it is too late. I shall never see him again."

She wrung her hands as in bitter regret or self-reproach. No one could see a fellow creature held by such mortal anguish as hers without striving to find the clue to it.

"Who is it you will never see again?" I said. "Not your friend who has just now left you? Is he not to take you to the opera to-morrow night?"

"Oh, the opera—" she said, clasping and unclasping her fingers. "He was so anxious to deceive me, he forgot. There is no opera now."

It was true, though. I also had forgotten it. There was no opera at that season. In a moment she began to speak again, rapidly and excitedly.

"He thought to deceive me, but I deceived him, she said. "He could never have guessed that I knew. He would have hated me if I had made a scene. He used to like me, he said, because I was always bright; and he will remember me bright. I was just the same to him to the very last, though I knew I should never see him again."

She paused. Even then, though her words were apparently addressed to me, I doubt if she were fully conscious of my presence. She never once looked at me, or turned her eyes in my direction.

"How do you know?" I asked her at last.

"I was told," she said more absently, "and I inquired, and found it was true. When he asked me to come here to-day I knew it was for the last time, and knowing what I did, his manner told me, too. We have often been here," she went on a little wildly, looking round her. "This frock—it was new the first time we came—and he said he liked it better than any dress he had ever seen." She started to her feet again, both hands pressed with the familiar gesture on her heart. "Oh, I can't bear it!" she cried.

We were interrupted. "Lisa, I have come!" cried a voice from the upper end of the garden. A young woman, poorly clad in a dingy brown gown and shawl, came running toward us with outstretched hands.

"Is he gone?" she cried breathlessly.

I do not know what it was that moved that girl. Whether the outspoken question acted like an as yet unrealized presentiment of her woe; whether the familiar apparition of her friend recalled too vividly the dusty gloom of the work-a-day life from which she had emerged, to which she was about to return. For one moment she stood looking at her with startled eyes; the next, with one swift rush she had reached the end of the garden, she had cleared the low palisade, and sprung into the river. So swift was her movement that we heard the splash and noted the meeting of the waves, while still too struck with horror to move from the spot.

She was instantly rescued. Just below the garden a little wooden platform, supported by piles driven into the bank, projected into the stream and made a mooring-place for a boat. The boatman, a strong built, elderly man, was there, preparing to loosen his little bark. He heard the plunge. As the girl rose he caught at her dress with his hook, and with his sturdy arms lifted her out of the water. Almost by the time we had reached the bottom of the garden she was standing beside us again in the sunny path, dazed, dripping, half stunned, but otherwise none the worse. She stood still in the center of the path and looked down at her mud-stained frock.

"It is a good thing it will wash," she said in a minute with a laugh.

Her friend put her arms in hers and tried to draw her toward the inn; but she resisted, and freed herself from the grasp. She looked round her, shivering in the bright sunshine, and pushing back her long hair, streaming with wet, from her face. The man, with a shrug of his shoulders, had gone back to his boat. No alarm had reached the house; we three were alone. All at once the girl dropped on to a bench close by, and broke into an agony of weeping. Five minutes before I doubt if she could have shed a tear: now the cold, the clinging wet of her garments, the physical wretchedness and discomfort, had touched a lower chord of misery, and she wept convulsively with dishearing, heart-broken sobs. Her friend, meanwhile, stood beside her. She was a pallid, rather sullen-looking young woman, with a worn face. She did not speak, but put her arm round the younger girl, who turned presently and hid her face against her friend. In another minute she rose, and suffered herself to be led away to the house.

I followed them, but only to desire the maid to see to their comfort and give them anything they might need. Then I returned to my afternoon's work. I cannot say I did much. Shaken and startled by the scene I had just witnessed, my thoughts were with the girl who had roused in me an interest so sudden and so deep. I did not go to her. Involuntarily I had been an intruder in a tragic hour of her life; the recognition that the intrusion had not been unwelcome lay with her, and with her friend at hand I knew she would not feel herself helpless or deserted. Still, I was unwilling to go away without seeing her once more. The hours passed; the girl's bonnet still hung on the tree where she had tied it in the morning, and by this sign I knew that she and her companion had not yet left the inn. Toward evening, when I was preparing to take my departure, the bonnet was fetched, and, returning to the house, I met the two in the passage, and found that they proposed returning to the city by the same train as myself. The girl looked pale and languid, and disinclined to speak. The pink cotton was clean and dry again, her dark hair was neatly coiled, but all the pretty color was gone from her cheeks, the light had died out of her eyes; her frock hung about her in limp folds, and the crisp white muslin bow, which had given the last touch to her dress, had disappeared. All the freshness had gone from her toilet of the morning, as from herself.

Her friend, I fancied, kept a sort of jealous guard over her, and we traveled back to the city in different carriages. On arriving, however, I sought her out before leaving the station. The interest she had awakened in me was too keen for me to let her go without some parting word.

"Will you come and see me," I said, laying my hand on her shoulder, "or may I come and see you? I should like to know something of you, to hear how you are."

She looked at me in silence.

"No," she said at last, shaking her head, "your life lies there—mine here"—pointing with her two hands; "we have nothing more to do with each other."

The words were defiant; but her voice and the look in her eye was not. The next moment she had disappeared with her friend in the crowd. I have never seen her since.

It was long before I revisited my river garden. A desecrating breath had passed over its green berceaux, a life tragedy had troubled the peace of its limpid waters. It was already autumn when I saw it again; the paths were damp, the yellow vine leaves were beginning to thin. The silent melancholy discouraged me—I went there no more.

The Red Lake Pine.

At a meeting of the chamber of commerce of the city of Crookston, Minn., held Feb. 2, 1883, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The Red Lake Indians have repeatedly expressed a desire to convert their interests in the pine into more available means of support and would be willing to do so on a basis of equity and justice; therefore, in order to accomplish the result,

Be it Resolved, That the congress of the United States proceed without needless delay to treat with the Red Lake Indians for the pine of their reservation and secure the right to enter upon the reservation and cut and remove pine logs not exceeding 30,000,000 feet the first year, 40,000,000 feet the second year, and not to exceed 50,000,000 feet in any one year thereafter, the stumpage to be advertised by the United States government for a period of six months preceding such sale in some newspaper published at the capital of the State of Minnesota and in one paper published at Washington, D. C., and sold to the highest bidder or bidders at public auction, the pine to be removed from the land within a period of two years from the date of such sale, and the logs to be manufactured within the boundaries of the United States; the proceeds of the sales of the pine shall be given to the Indians upon such terms and conditions as the government shall agree with them. And as a guarantee of good faith on the part of the purchaser or purchasers they shall be required to pay 15 per cent of the gross amount of said sales at the time of purchase, the balance of the purchase money to be paid in full before the logs are removed from the reservation. Believing this method will obviate in a large degree the objections offered by Representative Washburn to the pre-emption law, and at the same time open an avenue to the vast and finest body of white pine timber in the State of Minnesota, which is in reality the only value there is in the whole reservation, except to the Indians themselves for hunting and fishing, and which without the pine would be equally as good for the purposes they use it, the reservation being unfit for agricultural purposes, and only valuable for the pine now standing on it.

THE FALLOW FIELD.

The sun comes up and the sun goes down;
The night mist shroudeth the sleeping town;
But if it be dark or if it be day,
If the tempests beat or the breezes play,
Still here on this upland slope I lie
Looking up to the changeful sky.

Naught am I but a fallow field;
Never a crop my acres yield.
Over the wall at my right hand
Stately and green the corn blades stand,
And I hear at my left the flying feet
Of the winds that rustle the bending wheat.

Often while yet the morn is red
I list for our master's eager tread
He smiles at the young corn's towering height,
He knows the wheat is a goodly sight,
But he glances not at the fallow field
Whose idle acres no wealth may yield.

Sometimes the shout of the harvesters
The sleeping pulse of my being stirs,
And as one in a dream I seem to feel
The sweep and the rush of the swinging steel,
Or I catch the sound of the gay refrain
As they heap their wains with the golden grain.

Yet, O my neighbors, be not too proud,
Though on every tongue your praise is loud,
Our mother Nature is kind to me,
And I am beloved by bird and bee,
And never a child that passes by
But turns upon me a grateful eye.

Over my head the skies are blue;
I have my share of the rain and dew;
I bask like you in the summer sun
When the long bright days pass, one by one,
And calm as yours is my sweet repose
Wrapped in the warmth of the winter snows.

For little our loving mother cares
Which the corn or the daisy bears,
Which is rich with the ripening wheat,
Which with the violet's breath is sweet,
Which is red with the clover bloom,
Or which for the wild sweet-fern makes room.

Useless under the summer sky
Year after year men say I lie,
Little they know what strength of mine
I give to the trailing blackberry vine;
Little they know how the wild grape grows,
Or how my life-blood flushes the rose.

Little they think of the cups I fill
For the mosses creeping under the hill;
Little they think of the feast I spread
For the wild wee creatures that must be fed;
Squirrel and butterfly, bird and bee,
And the creeping things that no eye may see.

Lord of the harvest, thou dost know
How the summers and winters go.
Never a ship sails east or west
Laden with treasures at my behest,
Yet my being thrills to the voice of God
When I give my gold to the golden-rod.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

The Authors of the Bible.

New York Tribune: Sermons on and about the Bible are now being preached all over the country. Some of these are merely angry reiterations of traditional and untenable positions by sincere but ill-informed men, and may be passed by with indifference. Others ably marshal all the arguments in favor of the traditional view of the Bible, with candor and honesty, and deserve respect. Still others embody the results of the latest and best scholarship, and attempt to preserve all that is really inspired and true in the Bible, free from the mistakes and accretions of tradition. The Rev. Dr. F. L. Hosmer of Cleveland, in a sermon last Sunday, spoke wisely and reverently about this venerable book. "What does it signify," he asked, "if Moses did not write the Pentateuch; if the book of Deuteronomy does belong to an authorship seven centuries later than was once supposed; if very few of the Psalms ascribed to David were written by him; if the age of that monarch was far less advanced really than later generations as they looked backward imagined it, and if our whole review of ancient Jewish civilization and the growth of its religion from low and savage forms into its full ethical and nobly theistic flowering at last must be largely modified by new and more thorough investigation and research? The same vehemence of feeling is not wont to be aroused elsewhere in such doubtful questions. There is the Imitation of Christ, a little work of devout meditations upon the inward and outward life which, as I have read, has been surpassed in the editions it has passed through and the number of copies printed by only one book, and that is our Bible. It has become a manual of devotion. There has always been some doubt as to its authorship, though ascribed to Thomas a Kempis. But theories of some other authorship sometimes advanced have not awakened any strong feeling, or led men to say that the value of the book was gone if Thomas a Kempis did not write it. Again, as you all know, there are some persons who argue with much plausibility that the plays of Shakespeare were not written by this man, but by Lord Bacon, and while we would all be loath to take such a crown from the brows of the man to whom it really belonged and set it upon another's, yet we should not feel that the great value of these works was essentially impaired to us if it should sometime be proven that we had all along been mistaken in their authorship. Again, we have many beautiful hymns, metrical psalms we may call them, to be found in all church collections. Suppose it should be discovered that one hitherto ascribed to Charles Wesley was not written by him, but by some unknown man or woman living a little before or after. Should we feel that the hymn was henceforth valueless, or that the man discovering the fact was undermining our faith? Why then should we be much disturbed by a theory that David did not write this or that psalm or hymn in the ancient Jewish collection? Why disturbed by theories of non-Mosaic authorship of Deuteronomy, or greatly troubled in our religious belief at the probability revealed to us now that it makes a condition of the Jewish people far advanced beyond its civilization in Moses' time? How can it touch our faith deeply today to know that Ecclesiastes was not written by Solomon but many centuries later, or that the book of Daniel is nearly three centuries later than the scenes it describes and is more like a religious story, written for its moral, than a record of actual historical events? Why are people so tenacious of once accepted views, and hostile to all criticisms, however scholarly and reverent, which disturb them regarding this rich mine of Hebrew literature that has come down to us, when they do not mind similar changes of view in all other history and literatures, including their own?

Biblical Inspiration.

A prominent Episcopal clergyman of Cleveland, the Rev. Y. P. Morgan, thus explains the position of the Episcopal church in regard to Biblical inspiration: The church has never put forth or adopted any theory of inspiration. She simply declares Holy Scripture to be the word of God, and containeth all things necessary to salvation, and I would venture the assertion that Mr. Newton still retains allegiance to his ordination vow. Prof. Huxley has said the Protestant clergy may be divided into three classes: "Those who are ignorant of the criticism of the day; those who are informed and are silent; those who are informed and proclaim their knowledge." I am inclined to think there is some truth in his statement, or else the majority of Protestant preachers deem it ill advised, not cowardly, to proclaim even "truth" without discrimination. In all these discussions it must be remembered that criticism of Scripture is one thing, the practice of it another. He best apprehends truth who lives it. The chemist understands the analysis of air. The laborer does not, yet both live through the same, and the chemist's critical analysis would little avail did he not use his lungs. The most learned criticism of the Holy Scripture will not make man holy unless he obeys the precepts, and he who obeys is not injured by the criticism. Whatever opinions men may hold concerning the word of God, I pray it may ever be the "rule of faith and practice." Another well known clergyman of the English church, the Rev. Dr. Hayman, agrees with Bishop Lightfoot, the Rev. Dr. Hatch and the late Dean Stanley, that the common Anglican theory of the divine origin of episcopacy is utterly groundless. He says that there is no historical basis for this theory; and he urges "the revival of the rights of the presbyters as the governing body or council of the church," and that "the early bishop stood to his presbyters in the relation of a chairman to the ordinary members of a committee." He has just read a paper making these points at a public meeting at Sion college in London.

St. Fiacre.

The festival of St. Fiacre has been recently celebrated in France with great enthusiasm by the peasantry. The London Globe says that, like so many other celebrities of a later age, St. Fiacre was an Irishman of the name of Fevre, but soon quitted his native country, possibly for his country's good. Like some other saints he was not above sharp practices when they redounded to the glory of the church. "His principal exploit," we are told, "was one rather resembling the famous feat of Dido in Africa, when he obtained from St. Favon the grant of as much land, in a solitary place indicated, as he could in one day surround with a ditch. The traveler selected a suitable spot whereon to found a monastery, and taking his staff drew it along behind him as he walked round the limits of the future estate. As he went the earth opened beneath the point of the stick, leaving a deep ditch behind. Some natives—particularly women, for whom the saint seems to have had a special aversion—followed, hooting and accusing the pious man of sorcery, but the bishop, who had been brought to the spot, took a more charitable view of the affair, and called upon the spectators to admire a miracle instead of an act of witchery. So St. Fiacre got his land and founded his convent, as well as a famous chapel; but the doors of this place of worship remained always closed against all persons of the fair but incredulous sex. The relics of the saint had a vast reputation for their healing qualities; and Anne of Austria is said to have attributed to their influence the cure of Louis XIII., and even the birth of the grand monarque who succeeded him."

One of the most interesting and successful revival meetings of the present winter is that conducted by Mr. J. S. Smithson, in the First Congregational church of Chicago, of which the Rev. Dr. Goodwin is pastor, where a series of meetings for boys have been attended nightly by from 1,000 to 1,200 lads, to whom the meetings were made especially attractive.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Good Bread.

It is a triumph worthy of any woman's thought and effort to see that her family is always supplied with bread, and yet that none is wasted. The power to do this is akin to some old-fashioned virtues, and there is a close relation between the habitual condition of the bread jar and the pecuniary health of the family. A crust saved is a crust earned, might be put in striking letters on the cover of that jar with good effect. "I believe in a hereafter and tremble," said a housekeeper to me one day, "when I think of the bread that has been thrown away from that jar." This woman was one of those who have periodical awakenings, but who fail to give that cautious care and direct supervision to the small concerns of the house which alone result in a wise administration of its duties. The executive ability required to successfully balance the needs of the bread jar may not be given to every woman but she may at least see that none is wasted. If pieces have accumulated, dry them crisp and brown in the oven, and use them for the stuffing of fowls, for the basis of a pudding, or for griddle-cakes. If a half loaf or a whole one is too stale to be relished on the table, set it in the steamer over a kettle of boiling water, and send to the table on a hot plate and covered with a napkin; or, after pouring enough water over it to wet it, set it in a covered pan in the oven and let it remain there until the superfluous moisture has evaporated and the bread is really steaming. This should be an occasional dish only, as no one likes it many times in succession. Slices of stale bread may be dipped in egg and be fried brown in butter, and be served as an omelet. There are many other ways in which it may be prepared, and, with a little care, no woman ought to reproach herself with the fear that through her neglect and wastefulness her children will come to "woful want."

Teaching Children.

"A troubled mother" writes for advice in the management of her children. "Can a child be taught generosity?" she asks. There undoubtedly are children who cannot be so taught, but if we accept and make our own Herbert Spencer's theory that a child's moral nature is to be slowly developed, then we may have faith in our efforts to develop generosity in natures that seem uncommonly selfish. A more hopeful theory was never placed before troubled mothers. We must not expect too much of our young children; why should they not be selfish until they see that it is not best in any sense to be so? My own little son came to me with beaming eyes as if he had settled one of earth's many perplexities. "I've been thinking," he said, "how much better it would be if, when we saw anything we wanted, we could walk right up and take it—not have it stealing, you know, but have it right to do so." It seemed a pity to suggest to this political economist that if everyone had this right the velocipede and sled in the yard might at once be required of him by some other boy, but it settled the question at once. So when children begin to realize that selfishness conflicts with their own interests they will learn to restrain themselves, and the age at which they begin to see this depends greatly upon the instruction they receive at home. But often children are called ungenerous when they really are not so; because a child is unwilling to part with his playthings, because he will not give away his precious possessions, may be no indication whatever of a selfish disposition. There are parents who seem to think that their children are of a different order of being from themselves; they expect so much more from them, and such different manifestations from those which mature men and women exhibit.

Kitchen Keramics.

A very pretty dish for dessert is made by boiling some white sugar until it is so thick that it can ice around the edge of the saucepan or basin; then dip the edges of some macaroons in it, and line a deep, two-quart basin with them. Set this in a cool place, and when dry you will find the macaroons adhere. Just before serving, take the macaroon basket out of the basin; set it on a large glass plate, and fill it with whipped cream; or a delicate and delicious cream for the filling can be made thus: soak one ounce of gelatine in a little cold water; when so soft that it will dissolve readily, put it in one pint of milk, add sugar enough to sweeten; let this boil slowly, and it must be stirred constantly to prevent its burning. When the gelatine is entirely dissolved, remove from the fire, strain and add vanilla for flavoring. When it is cool stir in as much sweet cream as is required to fill the macaroon basket. This cream may also be poured in moulds; fancy-shaped moulds are pretty, and if you care to take the trouble it adds to the festive appearance of the table to put the cream in individual moulds. Set the moulds in a cool closet and remove the cream just before serving.

There are many women, at least two in every village, some of whose moments are made burdensome on account of having in their sitting-room, behind the coal stove, a long shelf of wood. This is usually painted white, to match other wood-work in the room, and on this white-painted surface the soft, gray dust settles all the time. There is no vigilance short of the eternal which serves to keep it free. A young wife tried this plan, and is so nearly satisfactory that she tells it for the benefit of others: Make a lambrequin for the shelf; it may be of aida canvas or of macreme. It need not be a deep lambrequin; from ten inches to fifteen will answer. Then cover the shelf with crash, and attach the lambrequin to it. The dust may settle there, but if given one careful brushing in the morning you will not be disheartened by seeing it for the rest of the day. The lambrequin in the case mentioned was made of macreme, and was crotcheted; three spaces were left through which scarlet ribbons were run; the edge was finished with a deep, large scallop. The ribbons were put in lengthwise. If one chose to do so, the ribbons could be put in the other way and the ends could be left a little longer than the lambrequin, and after being turned back in points, little tassels of crewel could be put on. This is a pretty design for a corner bracket.

No one but the very rich or the inexperienced housewife enjoys using tidies that will not wash, and there are few women who have not suffered pangs of grief in finding some delicate but useless article of this description hanging by one pin in undistinguishable ruin from the back of a chair after the exit of a "gentleman friend." The tidies of made macreme and of the lighter fish cord, embellished with bright ribbons, are really pretty, and can be used with unconcern. Those crotcheted of the fish cord are very easy to make. After making a chain of proper length for the width of the tidy, make alternate rows of thick stitches and of chains, so that space will be left in which to run ribbons; the ribbons should be of the exact width of the spaces; black velvet ribbon is also pretty to run in. When it forms a block on the right side work a star in yellow and scarlet silk.

An excellent way to cook a duck is to first parboil it; then take a small drippingpan, or even a saucepan will answer if it is deep enough, line this pan with thin slices of bacon, put in a little water with which to baste the duck. When the duck is tender and brown remove it to a hot platter; make a thick gravy, using for foundation the gravy in the pan, just taking out the bits of bacon; these may be placed around the duck on the platter. To the thick gravy when nearly done you may add canned mushrooms or green peas. Pour the gravy around the duck also. With this should be served mashed potatoes, turnips, onions, boiled or cut in thin slices, and fried brown in butter and lard. Currant jelly or cranberries cannot be spared.

To make delicious almond candy take one pound of sugar and about half a pint of water; put in part of the white of an egg to clarify the sugar; let this boil a few minutes and remove any scum that arises. When the sugar begins to candy drop in the dry almonds; first, however, you should blanch the nuts by pouring hot water over them, and letting them stand in it a few minutes; then the skin will slip off readily. Spread the candy on buttered plates to cool.

If you have plain, boiled rice for dinner, and have a little left, it is by no means necessary that this should be thrown away; it will help to make delicious fritters; add milk and flour and one egg for the batter; if you have fruit to put in, so much the better; drop by spoonfuls in hot lard and fry till a delicate brown; a little sugar in the batter helps to give it a brown tinge.

If any one desires to "paint the lily" she may convert Malaga grapes into crystallized fruit. To two cups of sugar allow two-thirds of a cup of water; let this boil until it will harden in cold water; dip the bunches of grapes in it while hot, and lay them carefully on a platter to dry. The operation of dripping may need to be repeated to successfully cover the grapes.

There is danger, as many people have found to their sorrow, of a gossamer waterproof cracking when stiffened by cold; so before putting it on, in severe weather, warm it before the fire, both outside and in, and this danger is averted.

A simple and easy way to ornament a common pillow case for the baby's pillow is to feather-stitch it all around with scarlet marking cotton. Choose the cotton which is warranted not to fade.

MY VALENTINE.

Her eyes are just as blue a hue
As ever painter's palette knew;
Why, look! she's pretty as a picture-book!
Her hair—oh yes, her hair, her hair,
Is gold as any anywhere;
Her lips eclipse the rose; I think
She's sweeter than a pink!

And though she only stares and wears
The most aristocratic airs,
I guess it's owing to her style of dress!
For I am but a Jicker-Jack,
With tons of trouble on my back.
And she, ah me! is grand and tall!
She's Alice's best doll!
—St. Nicholas.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

I have met her many mornings
With her basket on her arm,
And a certain subtle charm,
Coming not from her adornings,
But the modest light that lies
Deep within her shaded eyes.

And she carries naught but blessing,
As she journeys up and down
Through the never-heeding town,
With her looks the ground caressing;
Yet I know her steps are bent
On some task of good intent.

Maiden, though you do not ask it,
And your modest eyes may wink,
I will tell you what I think:
Queens might gladly bear your basket,
If they could appear as true
And as good and sweet as you.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

Old Wildey.

You must know that Old Wildey was a wild duck that, four years ago, came one fine day in December to the mill pond, among the other ducks, and swam with them until they got almost to the place where grandfather fed them; then it was afraid to come any nearer, and would fly away again: and thus it happened that every night, when he called the tame ducks to the shore to feed them, Old Wildey came a little nearer and a little nearer, till one night she came to the grassy bank and looked at the other ducks eating up the grains of Indian corn that grandfather fed to them.

But, as she was a wild duck, and did not know that Indian corn was fit to eat, she just stood looking at them eating it. Well, one night she walked up among the other ducks, and turned her head to one side, and looked at the grains of corn with one eye; then she turned her head to the other side and looked at the corn with the other eye; then she took a single grain up in her bill, and held it a moment, and then swallowed it; then she carefully picked up two or three more grains, and ate them and flew away. This delighted us grandchildren very much. The next night she seemed to have found out that corn was as good for wild ducks as it was for tame ones; so she walked up among the other ducks, and when grandfather threw them down the corn she ate it up as fast as ever she could. In the course of a few weeks, when grandfather called the duck, she would fly out of the water, and would be the first one that would come to be fed, and before spring came she would eat out of his hand. So it went on until the early part of May, when the leaves were out and the meadows were dotted over with the golden dandelion, and blue in spots with tufts of violets. Then we all noticed that Old Wildey would occasionally leave the flock and fly away out of sight, and after a while return again, until one day, about the middle of May, she disappeared and we saw her no more. However, about the 1st of November, a flock of seven wild ducks were seen on the lake, and when the tame ducks came home to be fed one of the wild ducks left the flock and came up and ate corn with them. It was Old Wildey! And so it has been every year since. About the middle of May, when the ice begins to break up in the Northern lakes, Old Wildey leaves her winter home to go North; and every autumn, about the 1st of November, she returns to her old home in Pennsylvania. Each year grandfather and grandmother and the aunts and grandchildren wonder if Old Wildey will come back. This time, when Auntie Hannah came in and told Grandfather that Old Wildey had come, he put aside his newspaper and went to the feed-room for some corn, and called out, "Come along home, my 'duckie,'" when Wildey just flew out of the water and came to him and ate the corn out of his hand. Although she had been away for six months, she had not forgotten the voice that called her, or the hand that had fed her during the winter.

A Railway Presidency Not Offered to Windom.

Atlanta Special to Louisville Courier Journal: Senator Colquitt, who returned from New York, where he had been in consultation with the Georgia Pacific railroad people, said: "There is no truth whatever in the report that Senator Windom had been offered the presidency of the Georgia Pacific. I cannot imagine how such a report was started."

Why Windom Was Shelved.

The New York Times, after giving a very favorable estimate of Mr. Windom's ability, industry and integrity as a senator, proceeds to give its little theory of the reasons why he was laid upon the shelf; and, to tell the truth, it outlines the most effective argument by far which was used against Windom among what may be called the feeble-minded sort:

Mr. Windom, it is said, has amassed a comfortable fortune, and he settled himself in Washington to enjoy it. He built for himself a handsome house, and, overcome by the seductive influences of the national capital, he became, to all appearances, a citizen of Washington. Outside of the charmed circle of Washington all other things gradually lose their interest. Listening to the voice of the siren, men no longer regard what is said in their own country. Like the lotus-eaters of the poet's dream, men sit them down and say, "We will return no more." After a while the sense of power and privilege becomes so strong upon a man that he dimly fancies that he has a life-lease of his official term. To him the rude cabals, the vulgar dissonance, and the cross-roads caucuses of his distant constituents seem contemptible. He is rich and increased in goods. He has the full powers of a senator or representative, long in the service, repeatedly re-elected, and honestly mindful of the wishes of those who elect him, term after term. But his heart and life are in Washington—in Washington, where he passes for all he is worth, and where obsequious door-openers, clerks and servitors wait upon his every movement. There is no reason why this incense-laden and sun-lighted existence should not endure forever. He cannot with patience think of returning to his old home, with its crude belongings, its cynical critics and its unadmiring neighbors.

So Senator Windom sold his old home in Minnesota and seemed to settle himself for life in fascinating Washington, with its dinner parties, its gayeties and allurements, and its senatorial dignities. Meantime there had arisen in Minnesota a new generation that knew not Windom. The new men asked why Windom, the absentee, should be perpetual senator from Minnesota. They advertised the fact that he had forsaken the State that elected him, and to whose humble citizens he was indebted for his position. They even made photographs of his Washington mansion and circulated them as campaign documents. They reckoned up the small number of days that he annually spent in Minnesota, and they asked, with well-feigned indignation, if the greatest State of the new Northwest was a satrapy whose governor should reside in the national capital. They claimed, with some show of reasonableness, that Senator Windom had no sympathy with the people of Minnesota, since he was a resident of Washington and only a casual and infrequent visitor in Minnesota. How, they asked, can a man be our senator and understand us when he leaves his family at a seaside watering place and spends his few days in Minnesota in a hotel?

The Recent Earthquake.

Bloomington, Ill., Special to the New York Herald: About 5 o'clock yesterday morning the people of this city experienced a great sensation that savored of all the elements of a genuine earthquake. The first indication of the disturbance was the rumbling noise that rapidly grew louder till within a very few seconds it terminated in a sharp and quite loud report, shaking the earth and buildings with no small degree of force. A Herald correspondent to-day interviewed a number of people who were awakened by the first reports and all give about the same description of the explosive report. It commenced with the low, rumbling noise, and as the noise grew louder the building quivered and shook as well as the earth. In many places those who were first awakened rushed out of their houses in night clothes, in the greatest alarm, thinking that a terrible storm was approaching; but this error was quickly discovered, as the sky was clear and the stars were shining brightly. The inhabitants of the city, after the first noises had been heard and the shaking of the buildings had been experienced, felt that the Evergreen City had experienced an old-fashioned earthquake shock.

Kalamazoo Special to New York Herald: The statement that an earthquake occurred south of here late on Sunday afternoon is confirmed by reports from various points in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana. The shock was felt between 4 and 5 o'clock. It knocked down stovepipes and cracked windows.

Wolfborough, N. H., Special to New York Herald: At 2:55 o'clock yesterday afternoon an earthquake was felt here, rattling windows, crockery and articles of furniture. The movement was from west to east, lasting five seconds. Ten minutes later another slight shock was felt. Previous to the time of the first shock it was perfectly calm, but instantaneously with the earthquake the air was set in rapid motion, continuing so during the afternoon.

Experiences in the Blockade.

St. Peter Tribune, 7th: On Monday morning, Jan. 29, a train left Chicago on the Chicago & Northwestern road with seventy-five passengers for the West. Of these on board, fifty-nine were bound for Dakota, two for Wyoming Territory, and fourteen were way passengers. It took the train until 2 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday to reach Eyota; there the storm stopped the train, and the passengers remained in the cars until 5 p. m., when the citizens of Eyota went to their rescue with teams and took them through a binding storm to the hotels. On Wednesday the train reached Rochester, and on Thursday got to Waseca, and Saturday afternoon arrived in St. Peter. The conductor after he arrived here received orders to return to Winona with his train, but the passengers refused to vacate the cars on the ground that they had been on the way so long that many of them were out of money and could not go to hotels, but if they were permitted to remain in the cars and keep warm that they could purchase crackers with their limited means and thus get along. Superintendent Sanborn was advised by telegraph of the situation, an he telegraphed back to let the passengers hold the fort. They remained in the cars until Monday. On Sunday they purchased bread and hams, and Mr. Cardinal cooked the latter free of charge and also furnished them with a supply of coffee. Mr. Joshua Smith of Englewood, Ill., who was one of the passengers, says he never saw a more cheerful set of people than they were up to Monday, when the commenced to grumble a little. One week in snow drifts and part of the time without anything to eat, is a little trying and no mistake. The passengers were taken back east by the railroad company on Monday. They were well pleased with their treatment while in St. Peter, and think Mr. Cardinal of the Nicollet the best man in the State of Minnesota.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

Washington Special: Senator Windom was asked if there was anything in the report that he was to succeed Mr. Frelinghuysen as secretary of state. He said that he did not know that Mr. Frelinghuysen was to leave the cabinet, and that he had no expectation of succeeding him, or reason to believe that he would. Windom says he knows nothing of his reported selection as the successor either of Brewster or Frelinghuysen, nor is he to be, as railroad men say, the president of the Georgia Pacific. He has determined to live there, however.

The superintendent of the Yellowstone park, Mr. Conger who has been in Washington several months expects to leave for the Park next week to look after its interest. He is of the opinion that Gov. Crosby is mistaken as to the amount of game being killed on the Yellowstone. The superintendent claims that his assistant has been ordered to enforce the laws prohibiting the killing of game in that section, and that he writes that the laws are being observed.

The house committee of Indian affairs held a special meeting this morning and recommended that the committee on appriations insert an item in the sundry civil bill providing for an appropriation of $200,000 in part consideration for the Sioux reservation in Dakota. The money is to be expended in purchasing cattle. The government is to buy them and they are to be in charge of a government agent for the benefit of the Indians.

There is considerable speculation in army circles in regard to the selection of an officer to fill the vacancy in the quartermaster's department caused by the death of Maj. E D. Baker, and the consequent promotion of Capt. Scully to be major and quartermaster. Lieut. F. B. Jones, Third infantry, who has for many years been regimental quartermaster, is strongly urged and many think he will secure the position.

The house committee on military affairs have practically agreed upon the terms of the bill to place Gen. Grant upon the retired list of the army with the rank of general The chairman has been instructed to prepare a report in favor of the bill to be submitted to the committee Thursday. The military report will probably be signed by two or three members.

British Minister West has written to the secretary of the state conveying the thanks of the government of the Dominion of Canada to the secretary of the treasury for his action in placing at the disposal of the authorities of British Columbia the Wallcott rebel and anticipated attack by Indians upon the English settlement there.

Senator Ferry takes his financial failure so easily that his enemies have taken occasion to circulate a report to the effect that it was a mere political trick to create sympathy with him in order to secure his re-election to the senate. It is said that his failure could have been prevented. It is said he can command unlimited capital.

The report of the commissioner of education seems not to have been well edited. It is full of errors of fact and figures, and the Washington correspondents are kept busy picking it to pieces. This document seems to differ from the census reports only in the fact that it is finished.

It seems Mr. Beltzhoover found the material for his crusade upon Gen. Hazen in some private letters of that distinguished military character that came into his hands by accident. It could be wished that so worthy a movement had used less unworthy means.

There is a very general desire among the senators to avoid an extra executive session after the fourth of March. The only difficulty in the way has been the fact that should no president of the senate be elected there would be no vice president pro tempore.

Secretary Chandler is talked of as the successor of Marshall Jewell as chairman of the Republican National committee. He seems to be a favorite of members of the committee.

The message of Gov. Bates was read before the Tennessee legislature Thursday. The greater portion refers to the settlement of the state debt. FOREIGN NEWS GOSSIP.

The Dublin trials are the sensation of the hour. The revelations of the informers are read with avidity and discussed with a warmth uncommon with Englishmen except in times of great peril or disaster. The evidence of the identification of the prisoners is deemed sufficient by the universal English press. Irish opinion, on the contrary, charges the castle authorities with first forming a theory as to the names of the men who were likely to have committed the murders, and then deliberately working up the evidence so as to make it fit the theory. Counsel for the defense has reserved the examination of the witnesses till a later stage in the trials, and probably will be able to reveal a regular system of training the witnesses in the rehearsal of the evidence before coming to court. A satisfactory change is noticeable in the tone of the better class of journals and politicians toward Ireland.

The steamer Kenmore Castle, 2,000 tons, from London to Shanghai, via the Suez canal, is lost. The passengers are saved, but many of the crew are drowned. The vessel foundered in the Bay of Biscay on the 2d in a few minutes. It was only possible to launch one boat, containing nine persons, all passengers. The crew numbered forty persons. The survivors, when rescued by a French steamer, only wore night dresses and were all very weak. A heavy gale still prevails on the coast. Several minor casualities involving loss of life are reported. It has now been learned that the captain, first mate and thirty of the crew were drowned.

Trevelyan, chief secretary for Ireland, in a speech denied statements made that the diminution of agrarian crime in Ireland was more apparent than real. He referred to the rapidity with which murderous crimes diminished when it became apparent that murderers would be executed. He denied that the government suppressed freedom of speech or the liberty of the press. The government was ready to work with the Irish members of parliament in advocating legitimate schemes of reform.

The Disastrous Flood at Cincinnati-Ohio.

The Chicago Tribune's Cincinnati special says: The Ohio river is still rising, and fears of the most serious consequences are spreading over the city. The news from Portsmouth, Ironton and Catlettsburg is that the river is still rising at these points as rapidly as it is here. From a feeling that the flood would prove but an incidental matter, people have come to regard it with the gravest apprehensions. The inundated portion of the city comprises a strip seven miles in length and from two to five squares in width. A raging torrent is flowing along Water street; North Front street is three feet under water, and the water is knee deep in places on Second street.

Every available team and man has been pressed into service in removing goods.

Only one engine at the water works can be used, and the superintendent has cautioned the people regarding the waste of water. The gas company has stopped operations, and as soon as the gas in one small retort is exhausted the city will be in darkness.

There is a tremendous demand for lamps and candles, as the supply of gas will fail entirely before morning. The newspapers will issue small editions, for the reason that they cannot get their papers to readers outside of the city.

A family on Front street was found perched upon chairs and tables on the second floor. They had gone to bed feeling secure, and when they awoke found the room filling with water, and all means of escape, except by skiff, cut off. There is no communication at all between Covington and Newport, and before morning it will not be possible to reach the suspension bridge except by a skiff ride of nearly a quarter of a mile.

Good business men who are not sensational say the damage by the present overflow of the Ohio river in Cincinnati, Newport and Covington will amount to millions.

The coal fleets are believed to be safe. They are guarded by steamers ready to render assistance if the line parts, but if the wind rises it is not thought any will be saved. Advices from above indicate that the line will continue at least twenty-four hours. The Commercial Gazette's special reports three inches gain at Parkersburg, and rising; the Little Kanawha rising one inch hourly; Marietta, two and one-half inches rain, rising slowly; Portsmouth, heavy rain for twenty-four hours closing at noon; river rising slowly, one foot higher than Friday night, and rising two inches an hour. Many business houses have cellars flooded. The excitement continues, the stage of water is taken half-hourly and bulletined at the newspaper offices. Crowds are still going to the water's edge where workmen are busy removing goods. The last rise is in the nature of a surprise to many; but if it had not been, it was impossible in the short time to get goods out of danger.

The Ohio is sixty-four feet four inches; rising an inch and a half hourly. This is half an inch above the great rise of 1847. Since 9:30 the weather has been clear and warm.

Northwestern F

Since Sept. 1 the mills in the Northwestern were fairly at work grinding upon the present crop of wheat, 2,549,030 barrels of flour have been received at Chicago. Reduced to wheat it makes 12,860,195 bushels; add to this the 15,190,276 bushels of wheat which eluded the millers and got in here without being ground up, and it shows that Chicago has received, either milled or unmilled, since Sept. 1, 28,190,270 bushels of wheat; an increase over the same period for 1881-2 of 5,085,935 bushels.

Senate bills passed reimbursing H. T. Welles of Minneapolis for money advanced to secure location of Milwaukee shops; to technically amend act incorporating village of Rockford, Wright county; making school district No. 3, Grant county, independent; to provide for road overseer and clerk in Glyndon, Clay county; to permit Austin, Mower county, to issue $10,000 of bonds for bridge building and repairing; to make lien from chattel mortgage on grain inoperative where grain is removed from premises on which grown (the Pillsbury bill). Reported for indefinite postponement: Senator Peterson's bill making legal rate of interest $7 each $100.

House, Wednesday, February 7.

Bills were introduced: Appropriating $2,000 for additional state institutes; a general act for the relocation of county seats; authorizing the printing of 500 copies of the annual report of the state Horticultural society, allowing legal notices to be published in daily papers; authorizing courts to sentence prisoners who plead guilty in times when the court is not in session.

The afternoon was spent in committee of the whole, and a number of bills acted upon.

The house had before it a bill proposing to raise the salary of the military storekeeper from $800 to $1,200. It met with the opposition of Mr. Child and Mr. Brown. Mr. Speaker Fletcher, during the progress of the debate, took the floor, and calling upon Mr. Burger, who was present, to stand up, said:

"I hope the amendment of Mr. Child, to make the salary $900 will pass. I want to show you the man to be benefited. This man went into the war when he was a mere boy, and while on the battle field he had his arm shot away. This empty sleeve tells the story. But he didn't come back home. He was promoted to a captaincy, for valiant service. This man's body is full of cold lead, so full that he hardly dare go near the water for fear he may fall in. If he should he would sink, as surely as Bunker Hill monument, he's so full of lead. Not content with shooting parts of him away, the rebels, fired a whole battery into him, and after it was all over such fragments as could be found were gathered together and sent home, and you see what is left of him. Not much it is true, but I believe he should be paid for his service, and given a salary on which he may be able to live and support his wife and six children. Instead of cutting the amount down, I should be in favor of making the bill retroactive so that the salary of $1,200 shall date a year back since his service commenced. I wasn't a soldier myself, and perhaps wasn't a coward. But I'll admit I was a little timid about that time, but I'm in favor, and always have been in favor of seeing the wounded veterans well cared for."

There was some further discussion on the bill and it was favorably acted upon by the committee.

Senate, Thursday, February 8.

Senator Pillsbury, at the request of the governor, introduced a bill appropriating $5,000, a portion of which can be used by the state board of health in the suppression and quarantining small pox now existing in the northern part of the state, and especially in the unorganized counties of Cass and Itasca.

Senator Castle introduced three bills on behalf of the committee on elections. The bills cover the recommendations as to biennial elections made by the governor in his message, and provide for the submission to the people of constitutional amendments as follows:

To provide that all general elections shall be held biennial, and on the even years as it is upon them that congressional elections fall.

To fix the close of all terms of office at the first Monday in January.

To fix the terms of the state auditor and the clerk of the supreme court (now three years) at two years.

To reduce the terms of offices of all judges of the supreme and district courts from seven to six years, and to provide that the terms of county clerks of courts shall remain four years.

To provide that officers whose terms are fixed at two years, and who shall be elected this fall, shall hold until the first Monday in January, 1887, so that all terms of like offices shall commence and end on the same dates hereafter.

The constitution is so worded that the five separate propositions must be voted for specifically, on one ballot, of course, and this at the election next fall. As will be noted, the changes, in brief, are to make elections biennial and the terms two, four and six years in length, respectively.

House, Thursday, February 8.

Appropriating $5,000 to prevent the spread of the small pox; authorizing Minneapolis to pay H. T. Welles $15,000, for money advanced to pay the bonus to secure the Milwaukee & St. Paul shops.

Mr. Collins introduced an important bill, proposing an amendment to Art. 13 of the constitution, adding a new section, which shall read as follows:

Judges may be removed from office by concurrent resolution of both houses of the legislature, if two-thirds of the members elected to each house concur therein, but no such removal shall be made except upon the charges which shall be entered upon the journals of both houses, nor until the party charged shall have had notice thereof and an opportunity to be heard.

The senate bill appropriating $5,000 for the use of the state board of health in checking the spread of the small pox plague in the northern counties was reported back with an amendment, providing that it should be applicable to the work in Cass, Aitkin and Itaska counties. This met with more or less opposition from members who believed that the board should use it whenever necessity might occur. The amendment was accordingly stricken out, and as amended the bill was passed. It was immediately sent to the senate where the amendment was concurred in.

The remainder of the session was spent in committee of the whole, Mr. Morris in the chair, and all the bills or general order recommended to pass, except the prohibition constitutional amendment, for the taxation of railroad lands, increasing the clerk hire of the public examiner and fixing the liability of railroad corporations for the negligence of employes, and the Wilson amendment prohibiting the issue of bonds to aid railroads on which progress was reported.

The house then adjourned until 2 p. m. on Monday.

HAMLINE UNIVERSITY.

The Main Edifice Burned—Loss About $40,000—To be Rebuilt.

On Wednesday morning 7th, Hamline university, located at the junction of College avenue and the Manitoba road and distant about two miles from the limits of St. Paul and Minneapolis suffered a severe loss by the burning of the principal edifice. A student named Spaulding in going from Vice President Chaffee's house to the hall discovered smoke coming out of a cupola, and at once gave the alarm. The resources of he college consisted of two Babcock extinguishers, one pump, and a supply of water buckets with water barrels on each floor which proved of little account. The cause of the fire is not definitely known to the people around, but it is supposed to have caught from a defective chimney located in the center of the building, east of the main entrance. The progress of the fire was slow as it worked downward. The roof, spreading on each side from the spot where it was first noticed. The floors below then went one at a time, the reception room floor falling at 11:45 cleaning out all the space below, leaving only pieces of steam pipes and heaters to show where the floors were.

The total less is about $35,000, of which two-thirds is probably covered by insurance. The students, young ladies as well as men, did all that human power could to save property from the burning building, and were successful to a surprising degree.

In the evening the directors held a meeting and at its close Bishop Foss said that the library and nearly all the furniture and effects of the students and Professors had been removed from the building, and with the exception of damage by breakage were not injured. The ladies' hall, which is not all occupied, would be arranged so that recitations and studies would commence Thursday morning and the regular routine move on without delay. Plans for rebuilding will be adopted immediately.

TRAGEDY CLEARED UP.

Richard A. Pierce, Supposed to Have Been Murdered in St. Paul Still Alive.

On the 1st day of January last, St. Paul was horrified with the announcement that Richard A. Pierce a young man of respectable connections and presumably faultless character, had been waylaid and foully murdered at midnight on the railroad track near elevator "A" on the upper levee. The circumstances were apparently conclusive that while on his way home, he had been waylaid, robbed, and cruelly murdered by midnight assassins. The estimable father of the young man confessed that he had no doubt his son had been murdered and that his body was under the ice.

Thus has the suspense continued until last Saturday morning, when Mr. Phillip Haas, lawyer, returned to St. Paul from Grand Rapids, Itasca county, on the line of the Duluth railroad, and reported to Mr. Pierce, father of the young man, that his son was alive and well. That he had been seen and that his version had been given of the supposed murder.

Pierce stated to Mr. Haas that after leaving the Sioux City freight house New Year's night, he proceeded up the track; that he had only proceeded a short distance when he was attacked by two men, one of whom he recognized an old enemy, a man formerly employed at the freight depot, and wish whom he had trouble. That a struggle ensued during which he, Pierce, was cut in the arm and back.

That he, Pierce, stabbed one of his assailants, who fell as if killed. Alarmed at the thought that he had been guilty of a murder, that under the impulse of the moment, he made up his mind that flight was the only way out of the difficulty.

Then he took off his coat and tore out his shirt sleeve, with which he staunched the blood from his wound.

That fearing he would be apprehended for murder, he jumped into a passing train and left the city, seeking the lumber camp, where he was found and where he is now supposed to be. Mr. Haas states that Pierce met the men in Minneapolis on Jan 1. That they played pool and had a fuss which was renewed on the train. That they followed him onto the track where the trouble took place, and that supposing he had killed one of them he fled.

A settlement was effected between the Kandiyohi county bank, at Willmar, and the parties who were S. E. Thurston's bondsmen during the time he was in the employ of the bank. So far as has been ascertained up to the present time his defalcation amounts to $4,684. By the settlement the bondsmen paid to the bank $2,000, while the institution bears the balance of the loss.

Scarlet fever is reported in Pine Island, Goodhue county.

It is now thought that the fire at Wells was caused by the Jew with an unpronounceable name, whose store was burned to get excessive insurance. He has left town to avoid some delicate attention from the enraged victims who were not overinsured.

Crookston has just received a 1,000-pound fire a arm bell and a hose cart.

Nels Satrum, a farmer of Hader, Goodhue county, is missing from his home. In late snow storm he had to leave his horses some distance from home, and started to get the same soon after, but failed to put in an appearance. He has now been gone over ten days.

THE CONGRESS.

Tuesday, February 6.

Senate.—The senate devoted the day to general discussion of the woolen schedule. Ferry made a significant remark to the effect that the senate might as well consider the post route bill, since no tariff bill could be passed at this session. He thought this was the opinion of the country as well as of himself. Other republican members of the finance committee dissented from this view. Later in the afternoon eulogies were delivered on the late Representatives Hawk and Updegraff. The only change in the woolen schedule were some changes in classification, which made a moderate reduction in the rate of duty.

HOUSE.—Another day has been frittered away in the house, with no substantial result beyond clearing the docket of a duty to two dead congressmen, the late representatives Updegraff of Ohio and Hawk of Illinois. It was perhaps just as well as devoting the same time to anything else. It is the live congressman who is more in the way of necessary legislation.

An effort was made by Mr. Haskell to bring the latter down to business by a resolution providing for night sessions; but the matter went over to the committee on rules. The tariff came up in the regular order, and the four paragraphs remaining of schedule B were disposed of. These referred to glass, looking glasses and glass wares, and were adopted without amendment; not, however, without many efforts in that direction. Every line was contested.

Over an hour was wasted upon the question as to whether five minutes or twenty minutes should be allowed for debate on a certain paragraph. The democrats asked for twenty minutes. Judge Kelley was willing to grant but five, and gained his point. At present but two schedules have been agreed upon. These comprise but sixteen pages of the bill.

Wednesday, February 7.

SENATE.—The senators became so inextricably tangled in a discussion of the proposed duty on woolen goods and worsteds that it was evident that the republicans could not agree, and a compromise was made by passing the subject temporarily and referring it back to the committee on finance.

The most sensational proceedings of the day was the placing of books upon the free list.

A determined resistance of the proposition was offered by Mr. Morrill and other New England members, but without avail. The amendment was carried by a majority of two—Messrs. Ingalls and Van Wyck of the republicans voting for the proposition and Mahone not voting. No trouble was caused by the silk schedule. An effort was made to put wood pulp upon the free list but failed.

In executive session the following nominations were confirmed: Commodore Charles H. Baldwin, to be rear admiral: Wyman Lincoln, Iowa, Indian agent at Ft. Belknap. Postmasters: Louis S. Fisher Sparta Wis; Mrs. Maggie B. Aikens, Canton, Dak.; Charles W. Francis, Ackley, Iowa; Fayette W. Crane, Magnaleton, Iowa; Robert H. Spencer, Algona, Iowa; Justice M. Rhodes, Jefferson, Iowa.

HOUSE.—Mr. Bingham introduced a bill in the house for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report what congressional legislation is necessary to secure cheaper telegraph communication.

When the house took a recess an amendment was pending to reduce the duty on steel ingots made by the Bessemer or any other process, except the crucible process, from .6 to .3 cents per pound. The evening session was equally profitless half an hour being consumed in obtaining a quorum, and it was after 8 o'clock when the house resolved itself into committee, the pending paragraph being relative to Bessemer steel.

Prior to the adoption of the motion, Mr. Ellis of Louisiana stated that he would insist upon the presence of a quorum during the night sessions, as the business before the house was too important to allow members to neglect it. Disorder reigned all the evening, and Chairman Burrows was frequently compelled to interfere as speaker to request gentlemen conversing to leave the hall and retire to the cloak room.

Thursday, February 8,

SENATE.—The senate spent the day over the free list. The discussion was desultory and not specially interesting. Books, pamphlets, etc., were formerly put on the free list, having been taken out of the dutiable list.

An attempt to put jute, which was likewise taken off the dutiable list the other day, also on the free list, failed, so jute was left hanging in the air.

The president to-day sent to the senate the following nominations of postmasters: S. D. How, Marshall, Minn.; Hattie E. Carroll, Plainview, Minn.; William Egbert Smith, Ruth City, Mont.; L. H. Werner, Superior, Wis.; Charles W. Wood, Burlington, Wis.

HOUSE.—Steel railway bars, and railway bars made in part of steel, were reduced to $15 per ton. This is a reduction of $13 per ton from the present rates.

The motion to reduce was made by Mr. Tucker last night, and modified this morning by Morrison by fixing the rate at exactly $15 per ton.

In the meantime the friends of the reduction were busy among members trying to secure enough votes to carry the amendment. Conspicuous among the workers were Messrs. Washburn and Strait. As the question of cheap rails is regarded as lying at the foundation of cheap transportation, the interest of Western and Northwestern members was at once enlisted on the amendment. The vote stood 110 to 90.

Friday, February 9.

SENATE.—A joint resolution for the abolition of the fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington and the naval appropriation bill were reported. The bill calls for $15,727,434, or $900,000 more than last year. The senate took up the tariff bill and continued thereon until adjournment.

Senate received the following nominations from the President: George W. Wuerspa, secretary of legation to Russia; Larne Peck, New York, United States consul, Fort Erie; Harry P. Dill, Maine, United States consul Guelph, Canada; William White, United States judge for the southern district of Ohio. Lot Wright, United States marshal for the Southern district of Ohio. Registers of land offices: George A. Moses, Ironton, Mo.; Senlop W. Switzer, Blooming, Neb.; James Morris, Valentine, Neb. Receivers of public moneys, John Q. A. Priton, Topeka, Kas.; J. Westley Tucker, Valentine, Neb. Postmasters: James F. Parker, Parkersburg, Iowa; George C. Hough, New Richmond, Wis., and Edward C. Anderson, Bozeman, Mont.

House.—The committee on coinage, weights and measures reported resolutions declaring the suspension of silver dollar coinage inexpedient and favoring a provision for add tional vault room at some point in the Mississippi valley. The consideration of the tariff bill was resumed.

Saturday, February 10.

SENATE.—After a brief executive session, Mr. Ingalls presented the credentials of Plumb, re-elected senator from Kansas, which was read and filed.

Mr. McMillan introduced a bill for an additional justice of the supreme court of Dakota.

Mr. Sawyer presented a remonstrance of citizens of Wisconsin against putting lumber on the free list.

The pension appropriation bill passed and work on the tariff bill was resumed.

The result of the seven hours' session of to-day was that the tobacco tax was reduced to 8 cents a pound, and the tax on cigars, cigarettes, etc., to $3 per 1,000, while salt to be used for preservative purposes was practically placed on the free list with the understanding that there should be another vote on the proposition to put all salt on the free list.

Then the senate came out of the committee of the whole, wherein all the tariff debate yet had occurred, and proceeded to vote on the several amendments adopted in the committee of the whole.

To the senate bank tax amendment Platt of Connecticut proposed an amendment in the interest of the country banks repealing the tax on circulation. This was defeated.

Then an amendment fixing the tax on certain varieties of vinegar was taken up. The discussion promised to be prolonged, so Van Wyck carried an adjournment.

HOUSE.—After routine business the tariff bill was taken up.

Mr. Dunnell, who appeared on the floor for the first time since the holidays, moved to reduce the duty on cut nails and spikes and spoke in support of his motion, but it was lost.

Monday, February 12.

SENATE.—The senate to-day, on the tariff bill, raised the rate on pig iron and scrap iron from $6 a ton to $6.20.

The lumber interest proved strong enough to restore the duty by a vote of nearly two to one. It has been put on the free list in committee of the whole, which would have killed the bill.

The nomination of James H. Teller, brother of Secretary Teller, as secretary of Dakota was sent to the senate to-day.

Confirmations; Eugene H. Plumacher; United States consul at Maricaibo; Green C. Chandler, United States district attorney Northern district of Mississippi. Postmasters; Squire D. How, Marshall, Lyon county, Minn.; Hattie E. Carroll, Plainview, Minn.; Charles W. Wood, Burlington, Wis.; Lyman H. Warner, Superior, Wis.; George C. Haugh, New Richmond, Wis.; James F. Parker, Parkersburg, Iowa; Charles M. Fulton, Columbus Junction, Iowa.

Nominations: Emory Speer, United States attorney, Northern district of Georgia; Joshua B. Hill, United States marshal, Eastern district of North Carolina; William H. Clayton, United States attorney, Western district of Arkansas; Robert G. Dyrenforth, Illinois, assistant commissioner of patents; James H. Teller, Ohio, secretary of the Territory of Dakota.

HOUSE.—A joint resolution introduced by Mr. Holman directing the secretary of the interior to issue no more patents to land grant railroads until further action of congress. The tariff bill was taken up, and a motion to reduce the duty on trace chains not less than three-fourths of an inch in diameter from 2 to 1½ cents per pound was carried. Mr. Dunnell moved to reduce the duty on chains less than ¾ and not less than ⅜ inch in diameter from 2½ to 2 cents, which was carried. The legislative appropriation bill was considered at the evening session.

Bitter Bread.

Complaint is frequently made by those who use baking powders that they leave in bread, biscuit, or cake raised by them a disagreeable, bitter taste. This taste follows the use of all impure baking powders, and is caused either by their containing alum (introduced to make a cheap article), by the impure and adulterated character of other ingredients used, or from the ignorance of their manufacturers of the proper methods of combining them. These baking powders leave in the bread a residuum formed of lime, earth, alum, or other deleterious matters, not always, though frequently, tastable in the food, and by all physicians classed as injurious to health. The Royal Baking Powder is free from this serious defect. In its use no residuum is left, and the loaf raised by it is always sweet, light and wholesome, and noticeably free from the peculiar taste complained of. The reason of this is because it is composed of nothing but absolutely pure materials, scientifically combined in exactly the proper proportions of acid and alkali to act upon and destroy each other, while producing the largest amount of raising power. We are justified in this assertion from the unqualified statements made by the government chemists, who after thorough and exhaustive tests recommended the "Royal" for governmental use because of its superiority over all others in purity, strength and wholesomeness. There is no danger of bitter bread or biscuit where it alone is used.

FLOUR—Market firm and quiet, with moderate local production. Quoted at $6.25@6.75 for patents; straights, $5.50@6.25; clears, $5@5.50; low grades, $2.25@3.25 per bbl.

WHEAT—The dealings comprised a few sample and a few grade cars. Holders made some effort to advance prices to $1.13 for No. 1 hard, but finally had to abandon it and accept the figure of Saturday, $1.12, for single car lots. There were some round lots offered on the basis of $1.13 for No. 1 hard, but at that figure buyers held off. There were sales of car lots in A at $1.12, and in B at $1.12. Something like a dozen cars of sample wheat sold at prices ranging from 80c for rejected to $1.08 for No. 1. Following were bidders' prices on' change: No. 1 hard, $1.12; No. 1 Northern, $1.08; No. 1 Southern, $1.03@1.04; No. 2 hard, $1.08; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; No. 2 Southern, $1@1.02. The feeling was steady, but rather more firmness was manifested than on Saturday. There were bidders at $1.15½ for May, but as there was no offers to sell brought out, there was nothing spirited in the bidding to show how high buyers would go for that future. Stocks are rapidly depreciating and there must soon be an improvement in the receipts, or before the end of the current month some mills will probably have to shut down to wait for supplies of wheat to arrive.

CORN—The corn market was steady and quiet; 49c was the price asked for spot corn. There were buyers at 48½c; 49½c was bid for March; 51c for April, and 53c for May.

Sprague, charged with incest at Moorhead has been discharged. The prosecution made the fatal mistake in allowing Sprague a private conversation with his daughter. She was no doubt influenced through threats or fear to testify in their behalf. There is a general feeling of indignation against him for the disgrace he has allowed to befall his daughter and his treatment to her.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

Miss Lula, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Thompson has been very sick this week.

The sleighing is magnificent on our roads at the present time, and has been all winter, for that matter. Our old settlers say they never saw it better.

Mr. C. B. Rockwood, on his return last Wednesday, brought with him a fine driving horse, buggy, and carriage, and also a number of draught horses and mules.

G. C. Wainright, of this town has left here, and taken up land, as he says, in Dakota. We should observe, that it is rather cold weather to emigrate, particularly to a prairie country.

V. D. Carruth, County Superintendent of public schools visited our school on Tuesday last. He complimented us very highly on having a very nicely arranged school, also in having the best building in the northwest.

The following article on the death of George H. Barker, late editor of The Red Lake Falls Era, we copy from the Barron County (Wis.) Chronotype: Thus has fallen at the hands of the fell distroyer one of our most gifted young men. We say "ours" for Barron County claimed him; for here he was born, here he was married, here he cast his first vote. It was in the Chronotype office, and under our guidance that he received his first instructions in the "art preservative." Naturally quick to learn he was soon master of his chosen vocation, and already attained the position of editor on the paper of which he was part owner, when the ravages of the remorsless disease which had seized him, warned him that his hold on life was brief. He was on his way to this village, accompanied by his young wife, and only lived long enough to reach Menomonie and died among friends. His funeral took place at City Hall Wednesday afternoon, and his remains were interred by the side of those of the father he loved so well, the late S. P. Barker, in the cemetery on the banks of Meadow creek,, three miles south of this place. Farewell, old friend. It is with a tear that we tender you the last sad emblem of a printer's sorrow for a departed comrade and turn a rule to the memory of George H. Barker.

MARRIED.

Beltrami Happenings.

BELTRAMI, Feb. 13, 1883.

EDITOR JOURNAL: As you have no regular correspondent from this part of the county, we propose, if agreeable to you, to send you such items of interest as may from time to time occur Our little town is dull now, owing to the inclemency of the weather, but we look forward to a more prosperous condition in the spring, as it is reported that there are several families who expect to locate here, and also prospects of a school, which is greatly needed.

The young men talk strongly or organizing a band, and even now is heard the to ot of a horn.

C. W. Kimberly, our merchant, is doing a flourishing business, and has in his employ Frank Fobes, a nobby little "counter-jumper," who gives good satisfaction to his exacting customers.

Charley Ohl has returned home from Ada, Ohio, where he has been attending school for the last year.

Arther Jackson has returned from Grand Forks, and Walter Jackson is visiting friends in our neighborhood.

Henry Reis, a brother of George Reis, is here and expects to spend the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. K. C. Fisher and son, of Leadville, Colorado, are now visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. T. Feriott. They talk of locating here.

Mr. and Mrs. Webb Murphy spend Sunday with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Murphy.

Mr. I. K. Webb, one of our most enterprising farmers, has returned from St. Paul, bringing with him a snow shovel and ice plow with which he expects to drain the Sand Hill River and surrounding country.

Miss Ida Murphy is spending a few days with Mrs. Mrs. Walker, of Rolette

There is to be a social dance Wednesday evening, when our young people expect to participate,

JIMMY.

FERTILE, Feb. 8th, 1883.

Fine weather, and business lively.

Goods are sold as cheaply here as in Crookston. Flour $2.50 per cwt. at the mill.

The new post offices' of Sundahl and Rindahl are supplied here.

Mails service from Fertile to Edna increased from once, to twice each week Anyone wishing to come here can take the stage on Tuesday or Friday.

Farmers have considerable wheat on hand yet, and the increase in price is inducing them to haul it off, consequently trade is good.

Many of our citizens are indignant at the fact that our County Commissioners can not settle with Norman County without a lawsuit, and we understand that the salary of our worthy County Attorney has been increased $200 for the purpose of carrying on the suit. Is this so Mr. Editor? Please keep us informed.

District No. 44 has advertised for bids on their school house, to be opened by March 1st. Plans and specifications to be seen at the clerks office.

Our township is agitated over the liquor license question. As it now is, we have no license, but as much liquor sold as if we had. The question will be submitted to the voters of the town at our next annual election, and we are determined the law shall be obeyed whichever way it is carried.

La Due & Co., have a new plan of dealing with their cash customers, which gives much satisfaction. Go and see them.

The Mill company are hauling lumber for extending their mill in the spring to keep pace with their large custom.

Dr. L. S Stowe visits our burg on Tuesdays of each week. He is a good physician, and a first-class dentist.

All our village needs for a boom is a good man hold of it, and we look for this in the spring. A visit to our vicinity will well repay any one who likes to see evidences of prosperity.

Yours, J.

ALDAL, Feb. 9th, 1883.

Editor JOURNAL:

As proof that we have not frozen out quite yet, though the mercury has frozen three times this winter hereabout, we conclude to let the JOURNAL hear from us.

The village of Aldal is prosperous as usual, the late nice weather and fine roads making trade lively.

No suffering from the extreme cold is reported 'round here.

Mr. J. Aldal is busy hauling logs to his saw mill, located here, and preparing for a lively spring campaign in the lumber sawing business.

The district school in district No. 70 is ably conducted by Mrs. Dr. A. Nelson.

Members of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod congregation met at Nelson's Hall yesterday, their pastor Rev. A. Ofstedal presiding, the object of the meeting was to finally adjust account in regard to the recent built parsonage.

The town board of supervisors met at the town clerks office yesterday pursuant to laying out a new road. The thrifty and prosperous township of Garfield is bound to have roads, but considerable anxiety is felt in regard to the condition of roads to the station of Beltrami, next spring when portions of the townships of Liberty and Reis are submerged by water, the citizens of the two last named townships do not seem to believe much in laying out and working roads.

Messrs. Knud A. Rolstad and E. K. Overland proposes to stock their beautiful lake with German carp next spring.

Dr. A. Nelson reports that scarlet fever which has prevailed to an alarming extent in this (Sand Hill) valley last fall and winter, has now probably disappeared, no new cases being heard from lately.

Mr. Knut Nelson our able and popular County Commissioner is having a flourishing business in the general mercantile line as are also Nelson & Opheim in the drug line. They are enterprising men and deserve success.

Since writing our scarlet fever item, Dr. A. Nelson informs us that a few cases of scarlet fever have been reported to him. The doctor has been very successful treating his cases, so we feel confident that the little ones will be all right.

Mr. Albert Hause met with a painful accident while cutting logs recently, the end of a falling tree hitting him and brusing him quite severely. He is now all right again, and able to smile on his many friends as genial as ever.

Rumor says Dr. A. Nelson intends to build a new store in the spring to accommodate his increasing business.

A petition for voting on the license question next election we understand is being circulated in this township.

VIKING.

St. Paul Globe: There are queer folks in this worlds some of the queerest of the queer ones are out in Kansas. A petitition has been presented to the Legislature of that saintly State praying for the passage of a law to "restrict immigration." The petitioners humbly say: "At the present rate of immigration all our lands will be taken up to the extent that our children's children will not be able to obtain a farm in Kansas." Oh, blessed Kansas! Oh, sacred soil! Let the immigrant beware and keep himself away. This generation bars the gate and throws away the key. Their "children's children" are to possess and occupy the land. But ho! ye immigrant, the great Northwest still invites you, our fertile acres, thriving towns and growing cities will welcome you. Abide with us, and prosperity and happiness are yours for aye.

City and Country (Columbus, O.,) for February, has put in an appearance with its usual budget of good things. It has for its illustrations this month: Cinderella (full page,) Wells Cathedral, England. (3 illustrations,) and several others others of lesser note. Mrs. Joel Swartz, a writer of some prominence, assumes charge of The Household this month, and evinces a knowledge of her department which will make it exceedingly interesting. The main editorials this issue are upon "The Gullible Public and the Scheming Advertiser—Exposo No. 3," which by the way, is becoming a grand feature, and "Gambetta" Mr. S. A. H. Freshney, begins in this issue, a series of articles on "What is Truth?" These articles will be found extremely interesting to thinking men and women. Valuable prizes are offered again this month, among the number we note an offer of Ten Dollars in Gold to the one telling the shortest verse in the Bible—but you must be a subscriber to compete. We trust this excellent periodical's phenomenal success will continue,

Minnesota Farmer: Despite the fact that last year was a disastrous one for cane growing in Minnesota, Mr. Seth Kenney managed to make, however, nearly 10,000 gallons of his usually fine syrup, but did not get from it a pound of sugar. He kept stirring his forty acres of cane constantly and by this means hastened its ripening. His experiment with his seed were quite remarkable. He had a lot of hogs which he fattened almost wholly with it. He found by cooking it whole that it was entirely free from that bitter, puckerish, taste which distinguishes it when ground "The seed itself," he says, "will pay for growing the cane, and I can get 1,000 pounds to the acre, and each pound is worth as much as a pound of corn."

Gardening.

Minnesota Farmer: A thoughtful writer recommends to every man especially in the autumn of his life, to take to gardening, if he has not already experienced its pleasures. Of all occupations in the world it is the one which best combines repose and activity. It is not idleness; it is not stagnation; and yet it is perfect quietude. Like all things mortal it has its failures and its disappointments, and there are some things hard to understand. But it is never without its rewards, and perhaps if there were nothing but successful cultivation the aggregate enjoyment would be less. It is better for the occasional shadows that come over the scene. The discipline, too, is most salutary. It tries our patience and it tries our faith. But even in the worst of seasons there is far more to reward and encourage than to dishearten and disappoint. There is no day of the year without something to afford tranquil pleasure to the cultivator of flowers, something on which the mind may rest—with profit and delight.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Wanted at Once.

Any one having good Western land for sale and wishing to purchase a good Piano or Organ, will do well to correspond with me at once. It is now approaching the season when we are comparatively idle, and as we wish to keep our manufactories running on full time and our men employed, I will make the following proposition: I will sell 100 Pianos and 500 Organs at very low prices and take one-half my pay in land (I would prefer timber land.) Our instruments are known all over the world, not for their cheapness but for durability and honest work. The Thomas Brothers' Silver Tone Pianos and Organs stand at the head. I shall take great care to send out none but the finest goods, fully warranted, and if they do not prove just what I recommend, send them back at my expense and I will refund the money. I am also publishing Sheet Music largely, on which I will send special terms to clergymen, teachers, schools, etc. I also publish "Thomas Brothers' Musical Journal," $1.00 per year. Sample copy, 10c. Agents wanted everywhere, who can do well with a little work. Write for bottom prices on our Pianos and Organs. Address

County News.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Mr. Henry Utzinger registered at the Hotel de Robbecke on Thursday last.

The interest in the debating society is growing stronger with each succesive debate.

There will be more than the usual number of "fast" men in town for the next six weeks.

Several loads of lumber have arrived for the new residence of Major Mix, which is to be built at once. It will be 16x20 a story and a half high, and when completed will be occupied by the Major's family.

Mr. J. W. Bragdon, of Chicago, spent a few hours with us on Thursday last. He came up here in the interest of several Chicago parties who think of investing in our town. He expressed himself as much pleased with our location and prospects, and to show that he meant business, picked out several business lots on Crocker, Cundy & Nelson's addition, with the necessary conditions to erect buildings thereon.

News has just reached us that tracklaying has been commenced on the Red River and Lake of the Woods Railway. Two boarding cars are now on the ground, the material, which arrived last fall and was covered with snow, has been dug out, and quite a large force of men are busily engaged in laying iron.

A letter from Mr. Railson of the firm of Railson & Williams, states that he is having a good time among the snow-crowned mountains and ice-bound fjords of his native Norway, and that he will be back to St. Hilaire by the beginning of March. He says the Indians that he intended taking to the old country with him, had read too much about steam-boat explosions, etc., and refused to cross the ocean in any other boat than their canoes, so he had to leave them behind.

Carman Happenings.

Carman Courier.

Jack McLaren returned Monday from a visit to his parents residing near Larimore.

Messrs. F. R. Sterrett and Mr. Spates of St. Paul, arrived Monday upon business connected with the firm of E D. Childs & Co.

A number of teams are busily engaged in transferring lumber from this station to Red Lake Falls. These parties are taking time by the forelock as it were and will deliver this article at the Falls while the pleasant weather continues.

Neglect was made last week to mention the fact that Mr. Velloy had purchased a plot of land on the opposite side of the railroad. The intention of this gentleman is to erect suitable buildings upon the purchase as soon as the weather will permit.

Residents of Carman are to be congratulated upon possessing a postmaster who is prompt in performing all the duties assigned him, and for the speedy distribution and delivery of mails. We have reference to Mr. K. Knudsen, and wish to be understood that this is not "taffy," but commendation bestowed upon one whom we feel justified in saying is entitled to praise.

An editor received a letter from an indignant subscriber who said: "I don't want your paper any longer." To which the editor mildly repled: "That is right. I wouldn't make it any longer if you did, because in that case I should have to buy a new press. The present length just suits me, and I am glad it suits you." It is to be hoped that this "soft answer turned away wrath."

Commissioners Ganning, Woodbury and Henderson, and Auditor Running, a committee chosen at the last meeting of the board of county commissioners to settle with Polk County, visited Crookston Monday and succeeded in making a very satisfactory settlement. Just how much Norman County will have to pay Polk is not yet known, as the books have not yet been straightened.

Grand Forks Herald: Every day the number of new arrivals in the city are on the increase and the various real estate offices are taxed to their utmost to attend to the numerous calls from strangers from all parts of the world. The number of entries at the Grand Forks land office within the past two weeks is almost beyond belief, and the rush seems to have only begun.

One More for Hallock.

Hallock Enterprise: Senator Steenerson representing our District in the State Senate, has presented a bill before that body last week, appropriating $500 for the purpose of building a bridge across the branch or Two Rivers near Hallock. This will convey to the minds of our readers, the idea that the Senator is not forgetul of our needs, and his efforts will be thankfully received by the residents in and around this town. We must place this measure to his credit. There is a probability of the bill's final passage, judging from the efficiency as a legislator already attained by the honorable gentleman, as well as ability and industry which he has applied to his official life.

Hallock Enterprise: Mr. Chas. Hallock came into town last Saturday on a short business trip after being absent about 3 months in Texas and a portion of Mexico. Remarking incidently on the severe cold of Minnesota, he said: "I am surprised to see the railroads in such a splendid condition Why, we came through no closer schedule time than we made in any part of Texas during our visit this fall, despite the low temperature and 'bockade.' What is more remarkable still the amount of travel is amazing. I expected to see very few people moving at this season of the year, whereas we had five loaded coaches carrying many immigrants, and every berth in the sleeper was taken. "If these things are done in the green, what shall be done in the dry?" in other words, if travel sets in so strongly at this midwinter season what may we not expect by the close of autumn.

Manager Manvel told me before I left St. Paul that he expected a larger immigration this year than ever before, and the signs certainly justify his conclusions. Those who had supposed that the boom in this part of the Northwest had reached its climax are likely to be disappointed."

Good Advice To Farmers.

A correspondent to the Red Lake Falls Era gives the following very sensible advice, that, if followed, would be worth thousands of dollars to the settlers in this new Northwest:

"Throw advice to the dogs," is the popular sentiment; nevertheless, there are some matters in which, as a class, farmers are very negligent; some that they are apt to pass over as unneedful of earnest thought.

Probably the most common evil is that of farming too much. Take for an instance that of a new settler who has a few hundred dollars to invest in a farm. He hears any amount of praise concerning the great resources of the famous Red River Valley, the wonderful yields per acre, and the much reduced cost of farming as compared with other sections. He takes a homestead or buys a piece of land and proceeds build a home, break his land ready for a crop the following year and to make other necessary improvements. All this is perfectly right and is in fact a very praiseworthy act on his part for it shows that he has good sense in selecting a live country, one in which he can be sure of making a good living and of laying up a competence for the future; but it is right here that he makes his mistake.

He proceeds to break all the land that he possibly can during the first year. The next spring he has to buy his seed and various necessary articles of machinery, the purchase of which, generally runs him short of money. It is this season that he begins to contract debts and to lay a great amount of stress on "I'll pay you when I sell my wheat."

Then, just before the harvest season he must needs buy more machinery; a binder cannot be bought for a trifle and his debit account runs up amazingly. If his crop is a good one, he can come out in fair shape; but occasionally, as was the case during the past season, a shortage results or prices do not range nearly as high as was expected, consequently, it is a hard matter to make all payments promptly.

During the season, he has broken forty or fifty acres more, making his tillable land in the neighborhood of a hundred acres. He has had to sell his wheat to pay his debts, and is again forced to purchase his seed in the following spring, paying an enormous price therefor and compelled to give a seed-grain note, payable in the fall.

Then, too, one team is not able to do all the work on a hundred acres. He must buy another and pay a good round price for the same. Thousands of horses are brought into the country each year, and as farmers sow but a small acreage of oats, feed always commands a high price. Debts accumulate. He bases all his calculations on twenty bushels of No 1 hard at $1.20 per bushel and runs up accounts accordingly; to farmers of this class who are devoid of good management, an extraordinary number of sheriffs summons are apt to be presented during the winter following.

Now this is no mere fancy sketch; there are far to many who can testify to an experience similar and although their property is continually increasing in value, they are, for a few years, placed in straightened circumstances.

The remedy is simply. Don't try to do bonanza farming with a capital of only $250. Cultivate no more than can be done thoroughly. Be contented, for the first few years, with farming simply enough to keep one team busy. Run in debt as little as possible and manage in some way to keep your seed grain for the coming year. Sow a larger acreage of oats, buy no more machinery than is actually necessary, and lastly, but by no means least, do not calculate on $1.20 per bushel, until you get it.

A VICTIM.

THE SCARLET FEVER.

It is unnecessary for a child to die of the scarlet fever as it is that it should be blind with a cataract. Let us see; At any time before the body has finished its ineffectual struggle we are able to help it, not by wonderful medicines, but by the knowedge of anatomy and the application of common sense. We consult the sympathetic nerve, and do what it commands us to do. We must give this child salt when it wants it; we must give it acid when it has fever and anxiously craves it,—not vinegar, but lemon juice, because the first coagulates albumem, and the latter does not, on account of the surplus of oxygen which it contains. To imitate the soothing mucus in the intestines, which is now wanting, and to give some respiratory food at the same time, we add some gum arabic. To restore and relieve the injured nerve, we apply moist warmth.

In practice we can fulfill all this with the following simple manipulations: Undress the child and bring it to bed at the very first sign of sickness. Give it, if it has already fever, nothing but sourish warm lemonade with some gum arabic in it. Then cover its abdomen with some dry flannel. Take a well folded bed sheet and put it in boiling hot water; wring it out dry by means of dry towels, and put this over the flannel on the child's abdomen. Then cover the whole and wait. The hot cloths will perhaps require repeated heat. According to the severity of the case and its state of progress, pespiration will commence in the child in from ten minutes to two hours. The child then is saved; it soon falls to sleep. Soon after the child awakes it shows slight symptoms of returning inclination for food; help its bowels, if necessary with injections of oil, soap and water, and its recovery will be as steady as the growth of a greenhouse plant, if well treated. Of course, if the child was already dying, nothing could save it, or if it has already effusions in the lining of the heart or brain, it is much better that it should die. But if the above is applied in due time, under the eye and direction of a competent physician, I will guarantee that not one in a hundred will die of scarlet fever. I know that this will startle some of my readers, especially those who have lost children already, but I shall go still further. I maintain that a child will never get scarlet fever if properly treated. If a child has correctly mixed blood, it will not catch the disorder if put in bed with a sick child. This is still more startling, but nothing is earier of proof.—[Good Health.

On Tuesday Senator Steenerson introduced into the Senate a bill authorizing the city of Crookston to issue bonds to fund its floating indebetedness; also a bill authorizing the city to issue bonds in aid of bridge building. Both were passed under suspension of the rules. We have been informed that the latter bill was so amended as to provide for a vote of the people upon the issue of the bonds.

The escapade at the jail on Saturday night reminds us of a scheme that Ex-Sheriff B. F. Zarracher used to suggest to the County Board often during his administration. He tried time and again to induce them to build a high board fence around the jail which would prevent outsiders from gaining easy access to the jail windows to aid in the escape of prisoners. It is not too late to attend to this matter yet and it should be done.

At the meeting of the Agricultural Society, on Friday of last week it was resolved to sell the lumber now upon the Fair Grounds to meet outstanding accounts. The Fugitive's Flight.

Grand Forks Herald: Yesterday afternoon Mr. Steenerson, of Fisher, arrived in the city and informed Officer Fadden that Tellef Grundysen is in Ada, where he arrived in a fearful condition. It appears that after the discovery of Tellefs hiding place, where he narrowly escaped capture, feeling insecure in Dakota, he determined to get out of the Territory, and he accordingly put his plans into execution. Ada being the nearest point in Minnesota, about twenty-five miles distant, he mounted a pair of snow shoes and started. He was overtaken while on his journey by the late terrible blizzard and nearly perished. He persisted, however, and arrived in Ada with his hands and feet badly frozen, and terribly frost bitten otherwise. It is feared that the amputation of both his hands and feet will be necessary. Sheriff Jenks will start for Ada to-day to serve the warrant that is out for his arrest.

THE CELEBRATED

"KIDNEY-WORT"

THE SPECIFIC FOR KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER TROUBLES, CONSTIPATION, PILES, FEMALE WEAKNESSES AND RHEUMATISM.

PHYSICIANS ENDORSE HEARTILY.

"I have found Kidney-Wort to work like a charm, doing all that is claimed for it. After using it several years in my practice, I, a 'regular physician,' can endorse it heartily. It has done better than any remedy I ever used."—R. K. Clark, M. D., South Hero, Vt.

DANGEROUS KIDNEY DISEASE.

"A stroke of paralysis prostrated me, also dangerously diseasing my kidneys. The doctors failed, but Kidney-Wort cured me."—E. Slade, 18 Blackstone St., Boston, Mass.

"My kidney troubles had lasted for 8 years. I often passed blood. Kidney-Wort cured me."—Michael Coto, Montgomery Center, Vt.

KIDNEY DISEASE AND RHEUMATISM.

"Two of my friends had my trouble," says Mr. Elbridge Malcolm, of West Bath, Me. "I was given up to die, by my physician and friends. We all had kidney disease and rheumatism. Mine was of 30 years' standing. Kidney-Wort has entirely cured all three of us."

"I had kidney troubles for many years. Kidney-Wort cured me."—J. M. Dows, of Diebold Safe Co., 28 Canal St., New Orleans.

CURED AFTER 20 YEARS.

"I devoutly thank God that I found out the virtues of Kidney-Wort," writes C. P. Brown, of Westport, N. Y. "It has cured me of a 20 years' case of terrible kidney disease."

KIDNEYS, LIVER AND CONSTIPATION.

"The most satisfactory results," writes Jas. F. Reed, of No. Acton, Me., "in cases of kidney and liver troubles and constipation, have followed from the use of Kidney-Wort, by members of my family."

Kidney Troubles and Rheumatism.

"My attending physician gave me up. I'd had rheumatism and kidney troubles for 30 years. Many doctors and numberless remedies did me no good. My friends, too, thought my death was certain. Kidney-Wort has entirely cured me," so writes Elbridge Malcom, West Bath, Me.

LIVER DISORDER.

"Please tell my brother soldiers, and the public, too, appeals J. C. Power, of Trenton, Ill., through the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and Home and Fireside, that Kidney-Wort cured my liver disorders, which I'd had for 20 years."—12-2-'82.

RHEUMATISM.

"I have tried a great number," truly remarks Mr. W. N. Grose, of Scranton, Pa., under date of Dec. 12, '82, "but there is no other remedy like Kidney-Wort, for curing rheumatism and diseased kidneys."

INFLAMMATION OF BLADDER.

"Chronic inflammation of the bladder, two years' duration, was my wife's complaint," writes Doctor C. M. Summerlin, of Sun Hill, Ga. "Her urine often contained mucus, pus, and was sometimes bloody. Physicians' prescriptions—my own included—and domestic remedies only palliated her pains. Kidney-Wort, however, has entirely cured her.

INTERNAL PILES.

"I had internal piles for several years," said J. B. Moyer, of Myerstown, Pa. "Nothing helped me except Kidney-Wort. It cured me."

LADIES' TROUBLES.

Respect the confidence reposed in you by ladies. "It has helped me in intricate diseases," writes Mrs. Annie Rockbald, of Jarrettsville, Md. This lady correspondent wrote us about Kidney-Wort's curative effects.

RHEUMATISM.

"Nothing else would," tersely says Justice J. G. Jewell, of Woodbury, Vt.; "but Kidney-Wort did cure my three years' rheumatism."

DYSPEPSIA.

Our correspondent, Mr. Josiah Kenney, of Landisburg, Pa., says: "Kidney-Wort cured my dyspepsia. I had it in its worst form, too."

A WILLING OATH.

"I will swear by Kidney-Wort all the time," writes Mr. J. R. Kauffman, Lancaster, Pa. (All its patrons do the same, Mr. K.)

DELICATE COMPLAINTS.

Another lady, Mrs. J. B. Clark, Amitee City, La., writes us: "Kidney-Wort has cured me of habitual constipation, pain in the side, as well as some other delicate complaints.

TUTT'S EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.

In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

TUTT'S PILLS

ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.

Cures Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Bilious Colic, Constipation, Rheumatism, Piles, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Torpid Liver, and Female Irregularities. If you do not "feel very well," a single pill at bed-time stimulates the stomach, restores the appetite, imparts vigor to the system. Price, 25c. 35 Murray St., N.Y.

A REVERSED DECISION.

"Of course he's very nice and agreeable," said Alice Safford. "And handsome, too, if one fancies that dark, escaped-brigand style. But I don't think I like him."

"Alice, how can you?" indignantly remonstrated Emmeline, the elder sister.

"And when things are all but settled between you!" groaned Althea, the second Miss Safford.

Alice was undeniably the beauty of the family. Emmeline was hard-featured and practical, and occupied the post of vice-principal in a neighboring primary school. Althea was short and stout, with filmy gray eyes, and brows so light that they were scarcely perceptible on the level plain of her face.

She was housekeeper and performed marvels in the pie and pudding line, beside making the family income go twice as far as it would otherwise have done.

But Alice—fresh-cheeked, rosy-lipped little Alice, with the straight, small features, and the liquid, sapphire-blue eyes—she had always been the family baby.

She practiced a little, sometimes on the cabinet-piano, which was hired at four dollars a month; she made up frills and laces for the other girls, embroidered pretty trifles on plush, and took care of the canary and the geraniums. Nobody dreamed of setting Alice to perform any of the harder more menial duties of the household.

And great was the family satisfaction when Frank Kingsdale fell in love with Alice.

"Now she will have the home she deserves," said Emmeline.

"And a husband who will worship her!" added Anthea, who, alas! had never had an offer in her life.

Perhaps if Mr. Kingsdale had not displayed his infatuation so plainly, Alice Safford would have accepted him.

As it was, she did not. She believed in the old proverb about the over-ripeness of the apple which fell too readily from the bough.

She was slightly fastidious and very capricious. And she made up her mind, after much deliberation, that Mr. Kingsdale was not "her ideal!"

"It's of no use," said Mr. Safford; "she won't have him."

"Is the girl crazy?" said Althea, dolefully.

"She must have been," said Emmeline, who, as a full-fledged vice-principal, believed in the efficacy of strict discipline.

"I don't love him," said Alice. "Am I to fall in love with every gentleman who chooses to take a fancy to me?"

"Love don't signify so much—not if you like and respect him," sighed poor Mrs. Safford, who had eloped at sixteen and had led a sorry life of it for thirty odd years in consequence thereof.

"Oh, mamma," said Alice, "I never could marry a man if I didn't love him."

"You're a silly goose!" declared Althea.

"I'm not an old maid, anyhow!" retorted saucy Alice.

"It would serve you right if Frank Kingsdale went and married Hippolyta Danesbury," asserted Emmeline.

"He will not do that," said Alice. "You will see that he will never marry anybody."

"Then you have blighted his life," said Althea, in accents of reproval.

"That isn't my fault," said Alice.

Mr. Kingsdale accepted his dismissal. Contrary to Alice's expectations, he came to the little hearthstone in the "Montefiore Flats" no more. The bouquets, new books and boxes of French chocolate ceased to arrive by special messenger.

There were no more private boxes at the opera; no pleasant drives in the park. It was a little dull.

But Alice Safford felt that she had vindicated herself, and when he had overcome his first chagrin she was certain that he would come again—of course he would come again.

Old Mrs. Wyndham Jones called one day—a powdered, overdressed old hag, with false hair, false teeth, false everything, who believed herself still to be as beautiful as Venus. She went everywhere and knew everybody and was as good as a newspaper.

"Well, I declare!" cackled this venerable interpreter of society, "Miss Alice has gone off in her looks, hasn't she?" And that accounts for it. I told Mrs. Fitz Arbine that Frank Kingsdale never would have thrown her over unless there was some good cause. Did you know that he was becoming quite devoted to General Salsify's neice, Miss Maugenet? Everybody's talking about it."

Emmeline looked grim. Alice blushed scarlet. Althea observed, tartly, that "they didn't take much interest in drawing-room gossip.

"No; of course not, said Mrs. Wyndham Jones. "Being so entirely out of society, all these things are new to you. But it's a pity about young Kingsdale, isn't it? He would have been such a catch for Miss Alice, there!"

Alice's cheeks flamed deeper than before.

"Thank you, Mrs. Jones!" said she, purposely omitting the Wyndham, on which the old harridan especially prided herself: "I am not in a hurry to be married."

"That's what all the girls say," chuckled Mrs. Wyndham Jones. "But good gracious, they can't deceive me! And Frank Kingsdale must be one in a thousand! They say Miss Maugenet's trosseau is to come direct from Paris. Oh, well, it's dress that makes her! She isn't pretty, only stylish. And she must be full five years older than Frank."

Alice said nothing after Mrs. Wyndham Jones had taken her departure. She busied herself in practicing a new "Nocturne," and gave the double chords with great spirit.

The next day, at breakfast, Mrs. Safford looked very worn and haggard.

"Girls," said she. "I've ill news for you. I'm sorry I ever invested in those Tennegridge mining bonds. Ten per cent. in gold seemed very attractive, but I ought to have followed your Uncle Cannaby's advice and let them alone. The whole thing has exploded. We've lost the $6,000, and what's worse, we're liable to the stockholders!"

"Oh, mother?" cried Alice; "what are we to do?"

"We must all go to work," said the widow, piteously. "I will take a few boarders—Althea can help me; and you, Alice, do you think, darling, you would mind a genteel place in a millinery or dressmaking establishment—something that was light and lucrative."

"Mamma," said Alice, clasping her hands, "I would go as a common servant maid, if only you will not look so white and terrified!"

"Oh, if only you had married Mr. Kingsdale," sighed Emmeline, wringing her hands.

"It isn't worth while to talk about that, now," said Alice, quickly.

Mrs. Stitchall, on Fourteenth street, agreed to initiate Miss Safford into the art of first-class dressmaking. The girl was pretty and stylish. Her customers liked to be waited on by such dimpled young hours; and, besides on account of her inexperience Miss Stafford came cheap.

Poor Alice was indescribably shocked on the second day of her apprenticeship, when Miss Maugenet swept into the show-room, with Mrs. General Salsify, and half a dozen fashionable friends in attendance on her.

"My niece has countermanded her Parisian order," and Mrs. Salsify. "She thinks that Pingat and Worth charge a deal too much. What we want to know now is whether you, Mrs. Stitchall, can undertake to have her dresses ready for the thirtieth of March."

Mrs. Stitchall beamed and said "she thought she could. For a wedding outfit of course, all other things must give way."

Miss Maugenet smiled, softly. She did look old and ball-worn, Alice thought, for all her eyes were so large and her figure so imperially developed.

"Yes," said she, "I'm to be married on the thirtieth of March, and I don't care who knows it. I am not one of your green school-girls who want to involve everything in mystery."

And then she fell to turning over the stuffs and criticising the fashion plates, as a fashionable lady should.

A strange pang rent poor Alice Safford's heart as she stood there, arranging imported costumes on their frames. Her eyes brimmed with tears. How could Frank ever have fancied such a bold, showy, loud-voiced votary of fashion as this?—Frank, who was so fastidious, so refined, so all that a man should be.

Suddenly she started. Her own heart lay before her, easy to be deciphered as an open book. Was she in love with another woman's affianced lover? And the deep color glowed on her cheek and her lip quivered. Oh, why—why had she not comprehended her own nature before? Now it was too late!

It was raw, snowy twilight when she started to return home, with a sad wind wailing through the streets and the gas jets flickering behind their misty gasses.

Never before had Alice Safford been out so late unprotected and a drunken man, just arrived at the gleeful stage of inebriation, who staggered down the street, made her heart beat with terror. She uttered a little scream as she stepped hastily aside, and walked nearly into the arms of a tall pedestrain, wearing a seal-trimmed overcoat.

"Why, Alice!" he called out, cheerily. "Is this really you? Alone, and at this time of night!"

"Frank!" was all that she could gasp.

"If you don't want to walk with me," he said, "I will not inflict my presence upon you. But I will keep a little behind, so as to make sure that you reach home safely. Dusk is the worse of all times for a young girl to be out in the streets of New York without an escort."

She looked at him with eyes of mute pleading.

"What is it, Alice?" he asked. "Why do you look so strangely at me?"

"Because you speak so coldly. Because you are so changed!" she cried out, "why don't you speak to me as you did once?"

He drew her arm under his.

"Alice," he said, "if I thought that you cared for me—"

"I do!" she exclaimed, passionately. "You know that I do. But, oh! what am I saying to you, the betrothed husband of another woman?"

He looked puzzled.

"This is quite new to me," said he. "Whether I marry or whether I die single, my heart will ever be true to one woman, and one only—and she is Alice Safford!"

"And Miss Maugenet?"

"Didn't you know? She is to marry my cousin, Colonel Kingsdale, who is the general's aid-de-camp. Miss Maugenet, indeed! Why, she is almost old enough to be my mother."

"I am so glad—I am so glad!" was all that Alice could say through her sobs.

Mrs. Safford was patching some muslin curtains, to make them do for the second-story hall bedroom, Emmeline was writing out an advertisement "Boarders Wanted!" for the next morning's paper, and Althea was preparing a frugal bread-pudding for the economical dinner, when Alice and Frank Kingsdale came in.

Mrs. Safford dropped her needle, Althea set down the pudding on the table, and Emmeline sat with her pen suspended in mid air.

"It's all right," said Frank, shaking hands all around. "We're engaged. We're to be married next week. Lest Alice here should change her mind, you know!"

"I shall never change my mind," said Alice, almost indignantly. "I have always loved Frank—always! Only I didn't know it until I thought I had lost him."

They were married very quietly; and old Mrs. Wyndham Jones protested that she had known it all along.

So the Mrs. Wyndham Jones' of the world never like even the appearance of being taken unawares.—Helen Forrest Graves.

A Story of the Sea.

Such was the violence of the wave that boarded the steamer Melita, from England for Boston, on Wednesday forenoon of January 24 that a solid iron block was broken as if made of glass and the foreboom was snapped off like a pipe-stem. At the height of the storm the schooner J. A. Smith, of St. Johns, N. F., apparently in distress, was sighted to leeward, rolling and pitching in the heavy seas. The steamer's course was at once altered to speak the vessel, and in a short time she was near enough to make out that her crew desired to be taken off. In the heavy sea this was at matter of great difficulty and danger, but, running down as close to the schooner as was safe, the life-boat was got over-board, manned and started to the rescue. The seas then running where almost mountainous, and the progress of the little boat with its crew of rescuers was watched breathlessly by those on the steamer and the distressed sailors on the schooner. At last the vessel was reached, but it required skill and judgment on the part of the boat's crew to keep the life-boat from being dashed to pieces alongside. After much difficulty the crew of the schooner, six in number, were taken on board and the boat returned to the steamer. All hands managed to reach the Melita's deck, but the life-boat was smashed to atoms. The schooner had been a wreck for nearly a month. She was forced on her beam ends in a hurricane off Cape Chaperough during Christmas week, and at the time of the rescue she was a mass of ice—a floating ice-berg with a crew half dead.

An Ex-Confederate Army Officer.

Lieut. Philip P. Powell, of the Ninth United States cavalry, (a colored regiment,) is probably the only ex-confederate soldier now holding a commission in the United States army. He was born in Virginia, and when quite young entered the confederate service and served to the end of the war. He afterward studied law and was admitted to the Bar, but having acquired a taste for military service, he enlisted as a private soldier in the United States army. He passed through the several non-commissioned grades and embraced the opportunity of promotion from the ranks. His political disabilities having been removed, he passed a most creditable examination and received his commission as second lieutenant. He was assigned to the Ninth Cavalry. Lieutenant Powell is a relative of the Hon. Randolph Tucker of Virginia. It is stated that he is soon to marry a most estimable young lady of Livingston county, N. Y.

Josh Billings has been in Poughkeepsie visiting his mother, who is ninety-two years old.

COMMERCIAL.

ST. PAUL.

WHEAT—The market has shown considerable strength, and prices have been maintained in the face of heavy deliveries by wagon at the city mills. At one mill alone the daily receipts by teams averaged 2,000 bushels daily, making one of the heaviest weeks for business in the line ever known. Prices are now up to a good fair point and this, together with the fact that there is no farm work progressing leads farmers to haul freely, especially while country roads hold good. Rail receipts have been light, but are now increasing though showing mostly ordinary quality of wheat. The board of trade market has been firm, with a small advance in prices, and closing with an easier tendency, with buyers more choice in their selection of grades. The demand is steady, so that if sellers should make the slightest concessions from current quotations, all stocks would be readily taken. Speculation is not quite so active in the futures, yet sufficiently confident to make bids daily. Prices are now a little lower in bids than a week ago, both spot and futures, following Eastern markets. These are liable to be fluctuating, but in the main, will probably maintain values, as the supply of good wheat in Western farmer's hands is probably less than previously anticipated. Closing quotations: No. 1 hard, $1.10 bid, $1.13 asked; March, $1.11 bid; May, $1.15 bid; No. 1, $1.04 bid, $1.08 asked; No. 2 hard, $1.05 bid; No. 1, $1 bid, $1.03 asked; No. 2, 90c bid; No. 4, 78c; rejected, 68c.

CATTLE—Toward the close of this review week there has been a moderately increased supply. The demand has not been as extensive as heretofore owing to Lent and to the supplies of dressed meats from other points. Quotations steady at unchanged figures. Choice steers, $4.75@5 per 100 lbs; fancy steers, $5.25@5.50 and upward; fair to good do, $4@4.65; good mixed, $4@4.50; thin stock, $3.50. Milch cows, scarce and firm at range of $40@60 per head. Veal calves, $6@7 per 100 lbs.

HOGS—As near-by stock growers feared there might soon be bad roads in consequence of melting snows, those who had hogs brought them into market, so that while rail receipts were light, there was sufficient supply for buyers. Prices are easier than a week ago, at range of $7.25@7.40 per 100 lbs for dressed; demand fair. Sales on 'change on Tuesday: 2 cars at $7.40, and 1 car at $7.40. Live hogs quotable at $5.50@6 per 100 lbs.

SHEEP—Very scarce and firm. Demand moderate. Quotations: Fair to good, $4.50@5 per 100 lbs; choice to fancy, $5.50@6.

MINNEAPOLIS.

WHEAT—This market opened a week ago at $1.12 for No. 1 hard and closed yesterday at $1.10½ for spot, showing a general decline of 1½c for the week. The other grades and the samples fell off about the same as No. 1 hard. While this weakness has prevailed here there has been some ease in the market at other places. Yesterday, however, outside points regained the loss for the week and closed at the highest reached on the crop. It is not unreasonable to conclude, therefore, that local prices, stimulated by yesterday's firmness in the lake markets, will advance to the price of a week ago. The cause assigned for easy prices here is the refusal of local millers to follow up the advance: 5 cars of No. 1 hard sold yesterday at $1.11½ for March delivery. It was offered for spot delivery at $1.11, $1.10½ was bid; $1.06 was bid for No. 2 hard; No. 1 sold at $1.00; No. 2 at $1.02.

CHICAGO MARKET.—Flour, quiet but firm. Corn, moderately active and higher, 55⅛@55⅞c cash; 56⅛@56¾ March and April; 58⅞@59c May; rejected, 48¾@49½c. Oats, stronger; 38½c cash; 38⅛@38⅜c March; 38¾c April; 40⅝c May. Rye, steady and unchanged at 64c. Barley, steady and unchanged at 85c. Flax seed, stronger, at $1.27@1.27½. Dressed hogs, dull; prices a shade lower: $7.40@7.70. Pork, active, firm and higher; $17.95@18 cash; $18.02½@18.05 March; $18.20@18.22½ April; $18.37½@18.40 May. Whisky, steady and unchanged at $1.16. Call—Wheat, opened stronger, advanced ⅛@⅜c. Corn, firmer, but not quotably higher, except ½c higher for February and March. Oats, firmer but not quotably higher, except ⅛c higher for May and June. Pork, easier but not quotably lower. Lard, irregular: $11.15@11.20 February; 11.25@11.27½ March; $11.40 April; $11.52½@11.55 May; 11.55@11.57½ June. PACIFIC NORTHWEST!

Oregon, Washington & Idaho.

Offers the best field for Emigrants—viz.: a mild, equitable, and healthy climate; cheap lands of great fertility, producing all varieties of Grain, Fruit, and Grasses, in wonderful abundance; an inexhaustible supply of Timber; vast Coal Fields, and other mineral deposits; cheap and quick transportation by railroads and river navigation; direct commerce with all parts of the world, owing to its proximity to the Pacific Ocean.

NO DROUTHS, NO INSECT PESTS, NO HURRICANES, WHIRLWINDS, or OTHER DESTRUCTIVE PHENOMENA.

The Lands of the Pacific Northwest show an average yield of wheat per acre largely in excess of that of any other section of the United States.

No failure of crops has ever occurred.

Oregon Wheat commands a higher price than that of any other country in the Liverpool market.

An immense area of very fertile Railroad and Government Lands, within easy reach of the trunk lines of the Northern Pacific R. R., the Oregon Railway & Navigation, and the Oregon & California R. R. Co.'s and their numerous branches in the great Valleys of the Columbia and its tributaries, are now offered for sale at Low Prices, and on Easy Terms, or open to pre-emption and Homestead Entry.

The great movement of population to the Columbia region now in progress will be enormously increased by the completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Co.'s systems. This renders certain a rapid increase in the value of Lands now open to purchase or to entry under the United States Land Laws.

PAPA'S BLESSING.

Caught in His Own Trap.

"I have asked Wynn to come out this evening to talk over a little business, Dora. If he should arrive before I get here, you must see to him until I come. Be kind and polite to him, my dear. He is really a very well-meaning and unassuming fellow, and the most useful book-keeper I have ever had. He has seemed a little out of sorts lately, and I am sure would be most grateful any little attention from you."

This Richard Blair, the rich tea-merchant, had said to his daughter in the morning, on leaving his pretty villa at Richmond for the city, with an amount of pompous condescension which clearly manifested his sentiments with regard to bookkeepers and their kind.

Dora was an obedient daughter, as her reception of her father's guest plainly showed; but certainly the worthy tea-merchant would have found abundant cause to retract his opinion as to the same guest's modest and unassuming character if he had been a witness of his demeanor on that occasion; for no sooner had the door closed upon the servant who ushered him into the presence of his young mistress than—totally unabashed and unblushing—he took the young girl into his arms, only releasing her after leaving upon her ripe red lips at least half-a-dozen warm kisses.

Dora, not appearing in the least surprised or disconcerted at this greeting, bore unflichingly the situation for fully two minutes before she blushingly drew back and endeavored to bring into something like order her soft brown hair, which, with the dainty ruffles at her throat, had become somewhat disarranged by the welcome she had so obediently given her father's guest.

"It is a long time since I have seen you, Harry," she remarked, with a bewildering glance from the thick lashes shading the large gray eyes.

"I should think so indeed—quite an age!" responded the bookkeeper dismally. "I managed to get away half an hour before the time your father told me he should be home, hoping to see you alone; but he'll be sure to turn up before he's expected—it's just my luck!"

"Harry, do you know why my father has sent for you to-night?"

"I haven't an idea, excepting that it's something about the branch of the business in Hong Kong."

"I can enlighten you a little then, though I hardly think you will be as pleased as my father seems to expect. One of the men in the house out there has just died; he had rather a responsible position, I believe, and papa wants to send you out to take his place."

"As if anything could induce me to leave England and you, Dora!" cried the young man. "Why, the separation would probably be for years!"

"I am afraid you must go Harry," was the girl's rather sorrowful response. "You know my father; your refusal to obey his wishes would probably make something like an enemy of him, and render matters between us even more hopeless than they are at present."

"Dora, I must speak to your father," cried the young man excitedly. "When he finds that his daughter's happiness is involved, he can't be heartless enough to refuse our united prayers. He seems to feel rather kindly towards me. Anything would be better than this uncertainty!"

"No, dear Harry. Believe me, it would only be changing uncertainity for positive resignation of all our hopes. I know my father well, and it is useless to hide from myself and you that he loves money far better than his child. He has declared over and over again that he will never give his consent to my marriage with a man poorer than himself; and I know he will never retract his word."

"And you advise me to go off to China, with the probability of never meeting you again, Dora? Nothing can be worse than that, surely."

"Oh, Harry, I must have time to think! I heard of it only this morning," cried Dora, on the verge of tears. "There comes papa now, and I have still so much to say to you. I must see you again. Could you manage to come down on Thursday at this time for half an hour? My father is going to a dinner in the city on that evening."

"Of course I can," responded Harry, just as the door opened to admit the master of the establishment.

"Eh, Wynn, you arrived first! Prompt as ever—a most excellent quality in a young man, I hope my daughter has made you comfortable—eh Dora?"

"I tried to do so, papa," responded the young lady demurely. "I suppose my company can be dispensed with now?"

"Yes, my dear, you can go. By-the-way, you may as well send us a bottle of wine please."

"Well; Wynn," began the merchant, when the two men were left alone, as he walked up and down the room, evidently satisfied with himself and all the world, "I have to tell you there is excellent news from America; we have closed the contract with that firm in New York, of which you have heard me speak, and the transaction will bring us in something very like twenty thousand pounds. Not at all a bad job—eh, Wynn?"

"You are usually fortunate, sir," answered Wynn, a little bitterly.

"I have something else to say which will interest you more nearly, my boy. We have just heard of the death of Jones, our secretary, at Hong Kong, and I am called upon to send some one to fill his place. It's rather a good portion, and we need some one we can trust. I've been rather pleased with the way, you've done your duties lately, and I've been thinking—hem!—in short, I've made up my mind to give you the place."

"But, sir," began Wynn, in desperation.

"Oh, no thanks! I know you appreciate it and all that, of course, and I am sure we shall be satisfied with you. Could you be ready to go next month?"

"I will think it over, sir. I suppose it is not necessary to give you my answer for a day or two?"

"No, certainly not," replied the merchant, a little surprised at Wynn's way of receiving such a piece of good fortune.

Then followed an announcement which, for an instant, caused the bookkeeper to turn hot and cold with lightning rapidity.

"Perhaps you will be interested in a piece of family news which has given me the greatest satisfaction, Wynn. My daughter is to be married."

"Impossible! I mean, sir, I had heard nothing of it," stammered poor Wynn.

"Eh?" exclaimed the merchant, staring at his companion in astonishment. "No, I suppose not. The fact of the matter is, Miss Blair doesn't know of it herself yet; but she will, of course, be as pleased as I am. The letter only came to-day from an old friend of mine who has made millions—millions, my boy—in sugar, and writes propsing a marriage between his only son and my daughter. The young man has seen my Dora somewhere, it seems, and was quite smitten with the sly little puss. He is coming to us on a visit next week. Now, haven't I cause for rejoicing to-day, Wynn?"

"Pray; accept my congratulations, sir," replied the bookkeeper lugubriously.

"By-the-way, Wynn," the merchant went on, after a moment's pause devoted to golden anticipations, "it has struck me that you have been rather down in the mouth lately. Are you out of health?"

"Oh, no sir, thank you—not at all!" responded the young man hurriedly, rather disconcerted by his unusual solicitude in his behalf.

The delight with which the merchant had that day heard of the success of business schemes likely to make an important addition to the banking account of the firm, and especially anticipations of the brilliant marriage to be made by his daughter, had filled his heart with a sort of comfortable condescending benevolence and good will to all the world, which descended even to the affairs of so unimportant a person as his bookkeeper.

"Have you had any bad news?"

"No sir."

"Perhaps you are in debt. Don't be afraid to tell me the truth, Wynn. I feel quite a fatherly interest in you, I assure you, and I might do something to help you. I shouldn't at all mind advancing a hundred pounds or so."

"I thank you most gratefully, Mr. Blair; but I have no debts."

"Then there is nothing else for it, boy; you are certainly in love!"

Wynn started, blushing to the very roots of his hair, but could find no words to reply, while the merchant stared at him for a moment and then laughed uproariously, rubbing his hands with glee as he exclaimed:

"There I have it at last! Come, out with it, young man; what's the trouble? Won't she have you?"

"Yes, sir," stammered Wynn, in an agony: "but she is rich and I am poor. Her father would never consent."

"Pooh, pooh; Is that all? You surely ought to be able to manage that somehow. Is it indiscreet to ask who the young lady is? Do I know the family?"

"I am afraid—it wouldn't do—to mention her name," said poor Wynn, looking wildly about for some means of escape.

"Well, do I know the father?"

"Yes, sir."

The merchant reflected for a moment, then brought his fist down upon the table with a vehemence which made the wine-glasses rattle.

"I have it now."

Wynn turned fairly cold.

"You needn't say 'Yes' or 'No,' nor commit yourself in any way; but I think I've got your secret. It's old Brooks' daughter! I've seen you twice with the young woman lately. Old Brooks got the better of me in a business transaction the other day, and I'd like to be even with him. Anyway, whoever the girl is I'm disposed to help you."

"How, sir?" gasped Wynn.

"Why—hem!—if the old fellow won't give his consent, why shouldn't you do without it? What do you think of eloping with her?"

"What, sir?" cried Wynn, hardly believing his ears. "You really advise me to do that?"

"Yes—why not? What's more, I'll give you the price of the license for a wedding present and lend you my carriage any night you'd like the bargain! I know a clergyman a few miles from here, who would do the job for you willingly, especially if I give you a note to him. I did him a favor once."

"And you positively will give us your blessing and assistance, no matter who the young lady may be?" exclaimed the bookkeeper, almost involuntarily.

"Positively," replied his employer, firm in the conviction that here was a delightful opportunity of becoming revenged upon a man who had assailed him in his weakest point—his pocket. "I will help you without asking any questions. We must teach the grasping old sinner that his daughter's affections are not an article of merchandize. Nobody need be ashamed of you for a son-in-law, Wynn, my boy."

"Thank you, sir," responded the young man, faintly.

"Just consult the young woman, and, if all's right in that quarter, let me know the day, and the carriage and the price of the license shall not be wanting. I shall not go back from my promise."

Wynn did not fail to keep his appointment at Richmond on the following Thursday house, he found his book-keeper waiting anxiously to speak with him.

"Well, Wynn, is anything the matter?" asked the merchant a little surprised at seeing the young man at so unusual an hour. "Has anything new turned up about the American affair?"

"No, sir," Wynn stammered, blushing like the veriest school-girl. "I am not here to speak of business. I must beg your pardon for trespassing upon your time at this hour, but you were so very kind a few days ago as to promise—"

"Well, out with it man!"

"That you would assist me—"

"Aha—the young woman! I remember now," exclaimed Mr. Blair, laughing heartily. "So you have seen her? What does she think of my plan?"

"She has consented, sir," faltered the book-keeper, keeping his face carefully hidden behind the lid of a desk in which, to all appearance, he was searching busily. "On the day after to-morrow evening, if convenient to you—"

"The sooner the better! My boy, I am quite ready to keep my word." As he spoke the merchant turned to his desk and filled up a cheque, which he handed to his companion.

"There is the wedding present of which I spoke. Of course you must get a special license. My carriage will also be at your service at whatever time and place you choose to appoint. By-the-way, what does the young lady think of the China project? I hope your marriage will not affect your decision with regard to it."

"She is anxious that I should do whatever is most pleasing to you, sir."

"Ah, I see she's a sensible woman! I should like to call in the course of the evening, after the ceremony is over, and offer my congratulations, if you and Mrs. Wynn intend to remain in London."

"Thank you, sir. I was going to ask something of the kind. We expect to be at the Grosvenor Hotel."

"Should you like a week's holiday?"

"Not at present, thank you," answered Wynn, feeling guiltily that he was extremely likely to be given a much more prolonged holiday than he desired.

"Very well, my boy. I wish you all manner of luck. Return in the course of the morning, and I will give you the letter I promised to my friend the clergyman."

About 9 o'clock, p. m., on the day of the marriage, Mr. Blair, adorned with the unusual splendor of light kid gloves and a white necktie, and carrying an enormous bouquet of roses and orange-blossoms, entered the Grosvenor hotel and inquired for Mr. and Mrs. Wynn. He was told that the gentleman had been at the hotel in the morning and engaged rooms for himself and wife, but had not as yet appeared with the lady.

"Then I will wait in their rooms until they arrive; it can't be long now," replied the merchant; and he was shown into the pleasant little sitting-room reserved for the pair whom the astute clerk had already settled in his own mind to be bride and groom.

Mr. Blair had not long to wait, though in his present state of good humor he could very easily have borne a longer delay than the half hour he passed in well-satisfied musing over the good luck which lately seemed to have attended his every movement. He had received a letter from the young man whom he hoped to call his son-in-law, appointing a day for his visit to Richmond, and the prospect of this marriage was above all a source of self-congratulation with him.

Then, too, this evening's event afforded him indescribable amusement, as he pictured to himself the wrath and consternation of the man who he had firmly convinced himself had injured him deeply when he discovered that his only daughter had bestowed herself upon an impecunious bookkeeper. All alone to himself Mr. Blair chuckled with malicious enjoyment over this most delightful of jokes, and rejoiced in his own share in bringing his enemy to confusion.

"I wonder how soon papa is to be told of the happy event," he soliloquized. "Who knows? Perhaps it will be a family party to-night!"

Later the merchant had taken out his pocketbook and was deep in an abstruse calculation as to certain weighty transactions which might be undertaken when a little of the wealth of his prospective son-in-law had filtered into the firm, when there was a sound of voices and Mr. Blair knew that the bridal party had arrived.

Thrusting the book into his pocket and seizing the bouquet, he rose and stood in readiness, when the door was thrown open by the waiter, and, sure enough, Wynn entered, having on his arm a lady closely veiled.

The merchant advanced, bowing low, with outstretched hand, which was rather hesitatingly taken by the bookkeeper, who muttered only a few half-coherent words of thanks in reply to the congratulations offered him. Mr. Blair scarcely noticed the young man's evident confusion, so occupied was he in vainly trying to discover his companion's identity through the thick veil which she had not as yet raised. There seemed to him something oddly familiar in her figure, though, much to his chagrin, he saw instantly that she was certainly some inches shorter than Miss Brooks.

"And your wife? Am I not to have the pleasure of making her acquaintance?" he said, feeling somewhat vaguely uneasy.

Then the veil raised, to reveal the face of the merchant's own daughter, pale, frightened, beseeching; but still for a moment the man failed to understand.

"Dora!" he said in bewilderment. "What are you doing here?"

Dead silence followed; then the fairest of the merchant's castles in Spain fell with a crash.

"Can it be possible you are this man's wife?"

"Yes, dear father, it is quite true," said the girl's pleading voice. "Won't you try to forgive us? It can't make very much difference to you. You can't miss me, you know. for you never needed me, and I needed so sorely some one to love me!"

The bookkeeper was holding his wife's hand firmly all the time, and only drew her a little closer to him as he added:

"We are far from deserving it, I know; but I hope you don't forget that you promised us your blessing, Mr. Blair."

The merchant was about to speak, but suddenly checked himself, and turning abruptly walked to the window, where in total silence, he stood motionless for a few moments, battling with the bitterest disappointment of his life.

To his own surprise, even in the midst of almost uncontrollable anger, something in his daughter's pathetic words caused him a pang of genuine self-reproach, as he suddenly realized what a lonely, neglected life his child had led, while he in his pursuit of wealth, had never known or cared for any needs she might have which money could supply. Was it strange that she should have sought abroad what she could never hope to find in her own home? Then, too, the deed was irrevocable no amount of opposition could render the marriage illegal; and, after all, Dora might have done worse, for what Wynn lacked in fortune he partly supplied in business capacity. While these thoughts were rapidly passing through his mind, something else struck Mr. Blair uncomfortably. If he were to cast off these young people in anger, might they not in return make known to all their friends his own ridiculous part in this affair? Might it not even come to the ears of the detested Brooks? This decided him.

"This is a great disappointment to me, as you of course know, Dora," he said at last, turning to his companions, who were awaiting his words in almost breathless suspense. "However, the deed is done, and I suppose the most sensible thing is to make the best of what I must consider rather a bad job. I promised you my blessing, Wynn, and you shall have it, upon two conditions. The first is that you—and I suppose your wife—shall go to China, as I proposed."

"We are quite willing, sir," the bookkeeper replied eagerly. "And the second condition?"

"That you never, either of you, disclose to any human being who was the promoter and instigator of your elopement."

"I promise, papa," said Dora.

"And so do I, sir," said the young husband immediately afterwards.

And the blessing was bestowed.

Civil Service Reform.

On the 16th of January the president signed the bill to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States.

It applies only to branches of the service, which have about ten thousand clerks,—or, in round numbers, one-tenth of all the persons employed by the United States.

By this law the president is authorized to appoint three commissioners, only two of whom shall belong to one party. These commissioners are to make rules which are to provide,—

1. For competitive examination of applicants for admission to the service;

2. That the selection of officers shall be from those who are graded highest in such examinations;

3. That appointments in the Washington departments shall be apportioned among the states, according to the population;

4. That there shall be a period of probation before appointment;

5. That political assessments shall be prohibited;

6. That no person in the civil service shall use his official authority or influence to coerce political action;

7. That when, after notice, there is no competition for any place, any person applying shall be examined as to his fitness for the position, and

8. That notice shall be given to the Commission of the action of appointing bodies.

The commission is to employ a chief examiner, a secretary, and one or two other officers. It is to appoint in Washington, and at one or more places in each state and territory, examining boards, to consist of three members each, chosen from among those in service of the United states.

Examinations are to be held at least twice in every year. The places thrown open to competition are, all the clerkships in Washington department offices, and all the subordinate places in any custom-house or post-office where the whole number of persons employed is as many as fifty.

Of course, it is understood that this does not refer to clerkships which are already filled, but to vacancies as they may occur.

After six months from the passage of the act,—that is, after July 16, 1873,—no person can be appointed, employed, or promoted, in either of the classes of offices included in the operation of the act, who has not passed an examination in conformity with the rules.

No person addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquor is to be appointed to or retained in the service. Not more than two members of one family may be appointed to any office covered by the act. No recommendation of a person by any senator or member of Congress is to be received or considered.

Four sections of the act are devoted to the matter of political assessments. All persons, in every department of the goverment, are strictly prohibited from soliciting or receiving, directly or indirectly, any assessment, subscription or contribution, for any political purpose, from any person who receives compensation in any form from the treasury.

In no room or building occupied by the United States, may any person solicit or receive such contribution. No officer may discharge or in any way punish any other officer or employe for refusing to make a political contribution. And finally, all officers and employes are forbidden to pay or give to any other officers or employe, any money or other valuable thing for a political purpose.

All the provisions of the law are to be enforced by heavy fines or by imprisonment, or by both forms of punishment.

Such are the provisions of this most important act. It is believed by those who have urged it, in and out of congress, that it will deal a heavy blow at some of the great evils that have formed a part of the civil service of the government.

Foolish.

The romantic and foolish enthusiasm (or "rage") among a few thoughtless English women over the "noble red men of the forest" was never made more conspicuous than at the time Rankin visited the cities of the old country with his seventeen Chippeways forty years ago. Duchesses, and the Queen herself, "dined and wined" them wealthy ladies attended their exhibitions and lavished costly gifts on them, and one pretty London girl, of good family, fell so furiously in love with a "handsome" savage in the gang, that she actually succeeded in marrying him in spite of her father's protest. One of the receptions the Indians met with, is thus described by Mr. Catlin, who was an eye-witness.

They were at Manchester, and the hall was crowded full, and in the roar and confusion of applause at the end of their amusements, there was a cry from the end of the room, "Let that handsome little fellow come here" (alluding to Samah, who was very fine-looking young savage); here is a lady who wants to kiss him."

This being interpreted to Samah, he leaped into and through the crowd,—as he would dash into a river that he was to ford,—and had his naked arms around the young woman's neck and kissed her before there was any time for explanation.

The excitement and screaming and laughing amongst the women in that part of the room made kissing fashionable. Every one who laid her hand upon the Indian's arm or his bare shoulders got a kiss, gave a scream, and many of them presented him a brooch, a ring, or some other keepsake, and went home with a streak of red paint on their faces, and perhaps with one or two of black or green upon their dresses.

The young savage squeezed himself through this dense crowd, kissing old and young as he went, and returned to the platform, from which he held up and displayed his trophies with much satisfaction.

"You have done a very rude thing," I said to him. "It is not considered the proper thing in such crowds to kiss the ladies."

"I know what I'm about," retorted the savage, mischievously. "White ladies are very pretty and very sweet—and I kissed nobody but them that asked me."

Cost of a Congressional Funeral.

The cost of a congressional funeral has just been sized up by the Washington specials and it reaches the aggregate of $1,967. A bill of particulars is submitted, from which some interesting items are taken: Thirteen white silk scarfs, $117; nine black silk scarfs, $81; thirty-two pairs kid gloves, $72. Having donned these habiliments of woe, the committee provided for the inner man five and a half dozen imported Apollinaris water to neutralize the effects of the other creature comforts which come under the head of sundries; and to nourish the participants in the perambulating wake $145 of cold lunch, including ham sandwiches, sardines, sauces, boned turkey, spring chicken, and,as an appetizer, thirty-two boxes of strawberries and a full complement of lemons and oranges. Besides these, regular charges are entered for meals along the line from Washington to St. Louis. The balance of the bill is made up of special transportation charges and undertaker's fees. Withal, it would seem that it costs more to bury a congressman than it does to maintain him when living. And this bill is rendered in the case of a millionaire.

Gen. Butler to Miss Anthony.

Gov. Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts, writing to Miss Susan B. Anthony, in response to her invitation to attend the Woman's Suffrage Convention in Washington, says: "As I have already declared my conviction that the fourteenth amendment fully covers the right of all persons to vote, and as I assume that the women of the country are persons, and very important persons, to its happiness and prosperity, I never have been able to see any reason why women do not come within its provisions. I think that such will be the decision of the court perhaps quite as early as you may be able to get through congress and the legislatures of the several states another amendment. But both lines of action may well be followed as they do not conflict with each other."

Notable Foriegn People.

The London Times of January 11 reports that Mr. Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, has reached his scene of activity on the Congo, with 3,000 tons of goods. The stories circulated some time ago of his serious illness in Paris, and his sojourn at Nice and in Spain, were apparently a ruse to conceal his actual movements.

The Duke d'Aumale, who is very popular in France, has no fear of being invited to visit foreign parts. Some time ago he said that perhaps he might be chosen President of the French Republic. "If that day comes," he said, "I shall astonish the world and history by the loyalty I shall exhibit to the trust reposed in me." But that day will never come. The French Republicans will never trust the son of Louis Phillippe.

Fashionable intelligence in the English Court Chronicle: "Her Majesty is expecting an accession of grandchildren. An interesting event is about to occur (within a year of the last) in the family of the Duke of Connaught; another—about a month later—in that of the Duke of Albany; and yet another in that of the Duke of Edinburgh."

Bismarck is subject to fits of dejection. when he declares that his life has been a failure; that he has never made any one happy, neither himself, his family or the nation at large. "If it were not for me," he once said, when in a despondent mood, "the world would have seen three great wars less, and eighty thousand who died in their bloom might have lived, and how many parents, brothers, sisters, widows would have been spared their grief and tears!"

The total amount received or expended on Queen Victoria and the other members of the royal family is £803,332. In this is included maintenance of palaces expenditures in connection with royal yachts (£35,885), households of deceased sovereigns (£6,475), and many other items. It is estimated that about £50,000 per annum would have to be expended were there no royal family to provide for.

Alexander of Russia has eight million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year, or twenty-five thousand dollars a day, his daily income being equal to the whole annual salary of Abraham Lincoln. The Sultan of Turkey, with a bankrupt treasury, has six million dollars per year, and the Emperor of Austria four million dollars. Kaiser William, with united Germany to sustain him, has three million dollars; and Victoria, drawing from the richest treasury in Europe, has two million two hundred thousand dollars. This is exclusive of royal palaces, and of separate allowances to children. The European courts must be puzzled to understand how our presidents manage to live on such a pittance.

When the American Ambassador at Constantinople, Gen. Lew. Wallace, recently visited Jerusalem, all the Americans in the city came out to meet him at the Joppa Gate. The star spangle banner was carried by the Jews, and a leading rabbi made an address of welcome and led the crowd in giving three cheers. General Wallace jumped down from his horse, thanked the rabbi in appropriate terms, and shook hands all around. Afterward he was given a reception at the Consulate.

At Birmingham, England, a fortnight ago, a "potter meat manufacturer" named White was sent to prison for six months, the inspector having found on his premises no fewer then 352 "pieces of partially decomposed horse flesh,' besides large quantities of diseased pork and beef, and fifty tins of prepared meat, "which on examination proved to be totally unfit for human food." The manufacturer was greatly astonished at not being released on payment of a fine. These facts are not pleasant reading, but if some of White's celebrated potted meat has reached this country, housekeepers who read this paragraph will know what to do with it.

There has been a duel in Paris which nearly cost one of the combatants his life. This brings out an anecdote of M. Ambert, a noted swordsman. He was walking one day near the Tuileries when he perceived an old man looking fixedly at him. After enduring the gaze for some time he approached, and, drawing himself up to his full height, which age had somewhat diminished, he said coldly: "Might I inquire, sir, what procures me the honor of your attention?" "Are not you M. Ambert?" "Yes." "And I, sir, am the Comte de L——." "The Comte de L——? Let me see; yes, if I remember right, I killed you once." "M. Ambert, will you dine with me this evening? At desert I will tell you how it happens that I am still in this world after having an affair with you." And away the two adversaries walked off arm in arm.

A short time ago, as the czar was about to enter a rairoad train at St. Petersburg to return to Gatschina, he was accosted by a throng of peasants with cries of "Sire, give us bread! We are hungry!" Alexander was deeply moved, and at once inquired of the minister of finance if the peasantry anywhere were in actual need of food. The minister replied that it was indeed so, but the imperial treasury was so nearly empty that no relief could be afforded. At this the czar became very angry, because the state of affairs had hitherto been concealed from him, and expressed his determination to take up his residence at St. Petersburg, that he might keep close personal oversight upon the administration.

Leprosy.

A gentleman residing in Salem has recently returned there from the Sandwich Islands, where he contracted this disease.

Four or five years ago, Dr. McGraw, of whom it is said "a better authority on any mental subject is not to be had," warned our government against allowing any leper to come from the Sandwich Islands here. He and the physicians generally of those islands regard leprosy as both contagious and infectious. In a neighboring island set apart for lepers, there have been during the last thirteen years, one thousand eight hundred and fifty patients, of whom one thousand one hundred and forty have died.

In New Brunswick, Canada, there is a lazar house with twenty-six inmates, there having been, since 1868, ninety, of whom fifty have died. All of these lepers have come from within a circle of seventy miles. The first case there occurred some fifty years ago.

These lepers are practically dead to their friends, and in many cases are hideous objects to behold. Their sight is often destroyed, and their faces disfigured by rough scales. The word leprosy comes from a Greek word meaning scaly. The faces are also often swollen ulcers. The voices of the poor creatures are husky and unnatural from the swollen conditions of their throat (the larynx), and their fingers and toes, and sometimes their hands and feet, drop off at the joints.

There is not, however, at the later stage of the disease the pain that it might be supposed the patient would feel. Indeed, there is an absence of sensation. The disease, though incurable, is not directly fatal. The patients' lives average from twelve to fifteen years.

Leprosy has been regarded as peculiar to climates. The cases, however, in New Brunswick show that it may take root and thrive in a cold climate, and probably anywhere. It already has a footnold in the United States, and immigration is multiplying the cases.

A Mining Camp Funeral.

From Mary Hallock Foote's Novel, in the Midwinter Century.

A delay, inexplicable to Conrath's friends, in the reply to their telegram to his father, roused a good deal of feeling among them. It was hastily assumed that Conrath's family had "gone back" on him. The facts of the case were, that when the telegram reached New York, his father was on shipboard between that city and Havana, where his wife had been ordered by her physician to spend the winter. The silence was certainly far from paternal. The camp was sensitive on the point of its relations with the East, especially in the event of death. Whatever their indifference or faithlessness to their Eastern ties during life, the men of Conrath's rank on the frontier confidently expected those ties to contract in the extreme moment, and restore them to their early associations.

Without waiting for the silence of Conrath's father to be explained, the Shoshone partisans rose in wrathful championship of their insulted comrade, and said:—

"If they can't bury him decently, damn him, we'll bury him ourselves!" The case of the living sister could wait on that of the dead brother.

It was on this honorable errand Gashwiler had come, when he encountered Hilgard in the first strong agony of his bereavement.

Gashwiler did not see Miss Conrath, but he had a long and exciting argument with Molly, who protested that her mistress should not be disturbed on this or other business. She had met Cecil in the passage, after her parting and with a sure instinct, the girl had known that the hour of her young mistress's extremity was come. She indignantly repudiated, in her mistress's name, the offered honor to the dead.

"Wouldn't ye leave her even the body? Sure, she'll never sit behind that hearse—trailin' through the streets along with the lot of you, an' your music, an' your mil'try! She's not proud of his dyin', that she'd want the whole camp to be throopin' after 'im. The least ye can do is to leave him to her now!"

But Molly could not prevail alone against the resolute sympathy of Conrath's constituency. All she could do was to soften the proposition by a little merciful deception, and present it as a decent, kindly offer to give the chief of the Shoshone appropriate burial at the hands of his fellow Masons and comrades of the militia regiment to which he had belonged. Cecil gave her helpless consent, with the condition that all the expenses should be referred to her father. She was to far prostrated in body, as well as in spirit, to know more of the last scene in the tragedy of her life than such dreary echoes as penetrated the darkened seclusions of her chamber.

Conrath's body was borne out of the house and conveyed to the camp, where it lay in state in the unfinished hall of the new Masonic temple, to be gazed upon by the multitude. It was subsequently enshrined in a plumed hearse, drawn by eight horses fed on hay at a $100 a ton. It was preceded by the regiment of militia, keeping step through the miry snow of the street, with guns reversed, to the measures of the Dead March. The band which furnished the music was attached to one of the principal variety theaters, and, in the intervals of its regular performance, was often required to assist at funerals, where the camp publicly honored some favored actor in its social dramas, on his exit from the stage. The Masonic society marched behind the hearse in full regalia, followed by the fire companies and the populace. The latter had turned promiscuously on foot, or mounted on "livery horses" of uncertain gait and temper and might be relied on to appear at any point in the procession, according to its caprice, joining the ranks of the Masons, the militia, or the firemen, and keeping up a current flow of conversation on topics more or less relevant to the occasion. The cortege moved on slowly through the principal streets of the town, and out through its straggling suburbs to the cemetery.

The cemetery was a grim, untended spot, an acre of the primitive fir-forest, sloping westward toward the valley, and exposed to the winds that blew across from the snow-covered peaks. The fire and the ax had passed over the forest, and the nakedness of the land was left as the inheritance of that peaceful community which had pitched its low tents on the bleak slope. A few stumps and start, blackened pine trunks, a few young, slight trees, the sole mourners of the forest, supplemented these scant memorials raised to the human dead. Unpainted boards marked alike the grave of those who awaited at the hands of distant friends removal to a more permanent resting place, the grave of the poor and the unknown, and the grave of those whose place of rest was of less importance to the general public than its finality. The camp grave-yard, like the camp itself, was peripathetic. The city was at that time reserving the money it might have spent on the adornment in contemplating of its removal to another spot.

The heavy, soft snow had sunk and melted under the high glare of the sun, and lay in patches, like linen spread to bleach, offering a grotesque, irreverent suggestion that the dwellers in those sunken mounds might have risen in the night and washed their earth-stained cerements in readiness for the pending order to "move camp. The funeral procession, invading this desolate inclosure, took nothing from its haggard loneliness. It was impossible to associate the place with human love and reverence, or even with humanity's last enduring rest.

Conrath's body was lowered into the alien soil. His final allotment of it was small, and was grudged by none. Here no locater encroached upon his neighbor's claim, and the original boundary lines were kept inviolate. A brief stillness fell upon the multitude, diverse and disunited as the stones of a riverbed, except in the wave of sentiment which had brought them there; and then the words were spoken of a common hope.

The militia company, drawn up by the side of the grave, fired a volley over it. The second volley scattered badly, and the crowd recovering from its momentary reflectiveness, echoed the failure with jeers of derision. The mounted mourners had become exalted during the ceremony to a pitch of solemn enthusiasm which could only vent itself in the racing of their horses back to camp; and the militia company reported at its captain's headquarters before nightfall and drank to Conrath's repose in a keg of whisky opened for the purpose.

After the Battle.

Clambering over the rude bank of logs and earth that had formed the defensive line of our antagonists, I found myself at last on the well remembered ground. But what a sight met my eye! In the bright moonlight lay nearly 200 bodies of my comrades, their picturesque zouave uniforms now blackened by contact with corruption. In rows and in groups, just as they had fallen on that fatal day, these unburied corpses had become wind and sun dried skeletons. The faces that were upturned to the silvery rays of the moon had lost all resemblance to humanity, and were now simply hideous masks, the eyeless sockets of which seemed to mock me as I stood among them. But I was not alone, for at my feet writhed countless swarms of the repulsive Virginia tumble-bug, all struggling for a share in the awful banquet the god of war had provided for them. Horror stricken and heart-sick I gazed over the field and along the line we had held, seeing bodies in every direction, and in every possible attitude. Here one poor fellow had crawled to the foot of a tree and died as he sat. His fez was still on his head, the gibbering skull beneath it seeming to laugh at me, as the jaws had relaxed and fallen apart. On the sleeves were the chevrons of a serpent. Beyond were the bodies of five or six men, lying one over the other; but now they seemed like a design on a carpet, having become flattened to one level. Near these men was the body of a man lying apart from his fellows. Falling on his back, the dead man had flung his arms far apart, and one leg was drawn up as if in agony. Now the hands were bare of flesh and peeped hideously out of the sleeves, while the elevated knee had become shrunken, a wide rent in the cloth permitting the skin-covered bones to protrude. Everywhere about me these ghastly spectres met my gaze.—Bullet and Shell.

"TALL OAKS."

The Insignificant Beginnings of Some Tremendous Fortunes.

New York Special to the Cincinnati Enquirer.

One of my friends who has a a large experience in New York, and who was born on this Island nearly fifty years ago, said to me:

"Some day I will sit down with you, if you will not give me away, and tell you the remarkable origin of many of our leading men."

"Suppose you begin a little of it now," said I, knowing that a bird in hand was worth more than one that might presently sing in the bush.

"Well," said he, "look at Vanderbilt. I can take you to men here who used to loan him $3.50 to $5 to bet on the horse races at Long Island, where he used to take himself surreptitiously, keeping a sharp eye to see that the old man was not around, for Bill had to run away and never had more than half enough money to take him there, as Vanderbilt believed that you would spoil a boy if you gave him anything to spend. Indeed, some of these men say he never paid them back those little sums he borrowed but it must be that he overlooked it. Now he is probably the richest man on earth. From the beginning of his days he had a gambling tendency, and did not care a cent to see races if he could not bet on them. Hence he is still a speculator, and keeps the old man's fortune active selling it here and investing it yonder. Take him all in all he is a pretty smart fellow for a little beginning.

"Then," said my friend, "look at Jay Gould, who is the most remarkable genius in finances in either world. The career of that man will be like an enormous comet that came and stood in the sky for a number of years, after he is dead."

"What did he begin life with?"

"Why, small sales up and down Broadway, and over the very pavement where he now drags his little legs, with his eyes on the ground, brooding speculations."

"Well, don't be in a hurry, but give me another instance."

"Well, look at the Mills family. Here is D. O. Mills, worth, I expect $30,000,000, and a very prudent and careful man in everything he does. He kept a little grocery store somewhere up the Hudson river. He had a cousin, Joe Mills, who was opening oysters in Fulton Market, and if you watch Joe to this day you will see him draw his coat cuff across his nose, a habit he acquired when he was in the market with his oyster-knife in that hand, and when the cold drafts used to freeze a drop on the end of his nose Joe would pull his hand across it. He got a little money there, and when D. O. Mills wanted to go to California, and could not raise $300 for the purpose, he went to his cousin Joe to borrow it. Joe went down to the bottom of his pocket and let him have the money, and I dare say D. O. went out in the steerage, and began in the smallest way, and finally left the coast its most successful man.

"Then look at Commodore Garrison. He was a Dutch boy, brought up in the highlands of the Hudson river. He became a kind of a common workman on vessels, and finally on steamers, and so worked his way along to be the purser and captain. Then California was annexed and bloomed into gold, and Garrison became the rival of Vanderbilt."

"Well, what was Jim Keene, or the first heard of him?"

"He was a milkman in one of the early towns of California, driving his milk-wagon into the place, and serving his customers with milk. Keene, however, does not hold the position he did here a few years ago. It is said he has had great losses, and has even had to mortgage his Newport residence."

Osone and Enthusiasm.

From the Winnipeg Times.

The highest piece of buncombe ever perpetrated upon a long-suffering community is the oft-repeated tale that "you don't feel the cold in Manitoba."

Of course you don't. When you see men shuffling along Main street as fast as they can shuffle; their fur caps pulled down over their eyes and ears; their faces covered with mufflers; their bodies wrapped up in heavy furs; warm moccasins on their feet, fur gloves on their hands, and for all that, a huge hump on their backs, you are not to suppose that they go about like that because they feel the cold. Not a bit of it. It's the wonderful enthusiasm produced by the ozone in the air of Manitoba which makes the people just a trifle eccentric. When you see a man leaning up against a fence or the side of a house to thaw out, he isn't cold. It's nothing but that confounded ozone in the air stirring up his enthusiasm again. No one ever feels cold here, the atmosphere is cold, bracing, so exhilarating, so utterly too in its vigor that people merely light fires and burn coals out of pure compassion for the coal dealers, who have got to live just like others.

When the mercury goes below 40 deg. below zero, as it did last night, it isn't cold. It's only just beginning to feel warm then, and all this talk about frozen ears and noses, blistered fingers and hands, is only indulged in by spiteful people, jealous of the ozone in our atmosphere. You don't feel the cold in Manitoba. Never lose sight of that one solid fact. It is truer than the gospel of Ecclesiasticus, and when some poor fellow gets frozen to death on the prairie rest assured that he never felt it, but just lay down out of pure spite and died. When you are told over fifty times a day on the street, by passing friends and acquaintances, that "it's a stinger," you must remember that they are referring to some bygone event which happened before you were born, and means no reference whatever to the wonderful ozone of Manitoba.

Last night was the warmest experienced in Winnipeg for a century. The fact that the mercury froze in many thermometers was nothing but the mean wretched spite which effects even thermometers. They knew it was a warm, pleasant night, but the ozone effected even their enthusiasm, and they had to do something eccentric. We haven't had a cold day yet this winter. Nothing but ozone and enthusiasm.

OUR HOME-MAKER.

ADELINE D. T. WHITNEY.

Where the mountains slope to the westward,
And their purple chalices hold
The new-made wine of the sunset,—
Crimson and amber and gold.—

In this old, wide-opened doorway,
With the elm boughs overhead—
The house all garnished behind her,
And the plentiful table spread,—

She has stood to welcome our coming,
Watching our upward climb,
In the sweet June weather that brought us,
Oh, many and many a time!

To-day! in the gentle splendor
Of the early summer moon,—
Perfect in sunshine and fragrance,
Although it is hardly June,—

Again is her doorway opened,
And the house is garnished and sweet;
But she silently waits for our coming,
And we enter with silent feet.

A little within she is waiting:
Not where she has met us before;
For over the pleasant threshold
She is only to cross once more.

The smile on her face is quiet,
And a lily is on her breast;
Her hands are folded together,
And the word on her lips is "rest.

And yet it looks like a welcome,'
For her work is compassed and done;
All things are seemly and ready,
And her summer is just begun.

It is we who may not cross over;
Only with song and prayer,
A little way into the glory,
We may reach, as we leave her there.

But we cannot think of her idle;
She must be a home-maker still;
God giveth that work to the angels
Who fittest the task fulfill:

And somewhere, yet, in the hilltops
Of the country that hath no pain
She will watch in her beautiful doorway
To bid us a welcome again.

ELIZA.

Eliza was very entertaining. She was not the handsomest by any means, nor the best loved, but she was the wittiest and cruelest of the class. We, her classmates, paid her every attention, for if we failed in the least that way we were sure of a shower of arrows equal to a half dozen charges from a pygmy regiment. In the main we fared very well. Eliza was witty, and she was strong willed, too. To-night the sun had set well in the sky, and only a few glints were left to brighten the old east school room, when we persuaded ourselves to part with Eliza's eloquence, and wended our way home. We were the class of '70—five boys and five girls. Next week was commencement and we thought we had reached the apex of learning because we were about to receive our diplomas, and could translate the Latin class motto given us by our teacher. We each had a ring with the words inscribed on the inside. I look at mine now and laugh at the puff balls of conceit we all were. Our feet were on the first round of the ladder, but we thought we had reached the top. Ah, me! how much we learned in four years. Eliza's description of the reception, to be given at her home, commencement night was what kept us so late in the old school room that night. Her description of it struck us as grand and fortunate for us was it that study days were over, else we could not have helped making ignominious failures we were so excited. Of the ten graduates there are but three of whom I shall make mention, Eliza, her cousin Margie, and Joel Sayes, Eliza's sweetheart. These three were inseparable; in school and out. They went to school together; they walked home together; they took moonlight strolls; together they scanned the city by day, and studied astronomy from the same lofty spot by night. Eliza was homely, but Joel was considered the Adonis of the class. He was inclined to foppishness; thought some of his white, ringed hands and smooth black hair, but still he was passable, and had his good points. We liked him better than her, and Margie, the dearest girl, better than either. But it was patent to all that Eliza loved Joel and Joel loved Eliza, and when that is the case there is bound to be a wedding, or so we argued, and we rather looked for the band to play, "Come haste to the wedding," at the reception, for Eliza had solemnly assured us she would take the cars the day after for New York, and thence take the ship for Europe, "to visit my mother's people—for I am English, you know, girls, and I want to go home before I die—just once." The grandly, pathetic air Eliza assumed was too absurd, and "we smoled," to use her expression "a broad smole." She used slang very often, and was sure it ought to be incorporated with the English language; it was so stirring and forcible. It might as well be for aught I can see; its use is so general. Commencement came, and we girls, one by one, glided onto the stage, spread our trails, read our essays, made our bows according to our several abilities, then vanished. The boys having done the same, minus the trail spreading, we were all marched in again and formed into a figure like a half moon, while we were urged to push forward in the path we were just beginning to tread, etc., finally receiving a ponderous paper tied up with blue ribbon, with which we filed off the stage for the last time, drawing free breaths and congratulating ourselves that we were each, one of ten as bright luminaries as the world possessed. The best part of the night was yet to come. So far it had been a trial, but the rest was to be pleasure—the reception and mayhap a wedding. We went. Such a blaze of lights, such sweet music, such perfumed air, such refreshments. Ah, they are to be long remembered. Here we formed another half moon with our school officers for a center piece, and received the congratulations of friends upon our achievements. We waited impatiently for signs of the wedding, but the evening passed and at its close Eliza bade us good by, and that was all. She really went to New York next day and thence to Europe. Joel staid at home, studied medicine, and seemed perfectly happy the while. They corresponded, certainly. Eliza was gone six months, and then came home, just the same old girl—neither better nor worse for the tour. I don't know that I said before, but Eliza's wit was her one very strong point, and she was not a brilliant scholar. Joel wasn't, either, although they might both have been, if they had studied. They were well suited, and it was said to be a match made in heaven. Of course, we looked for the wedding again, for they took up their old ways of walking, talking, and being forever together. But nothing came of it, and after a time we gave up thinking of it; still we were quite undisturbed when in our once favorite spot, the old school room, where we had congregated again just for fun, Eliza said reflectively:

"Girls, a graduating class is a family, in which no secrets are kept nor none betrayed. I have broken the faith, but to-night I'll make amends, and you shall hear a secret. It won't go outside of this old east room," she continued positively, "for tho' 'walls have ears and walls tell tales,' these walls are safe, for I have tested them many a time."

We tried to promise secrecy, but she snapped us off immediately: "Oh, snuff the candle! I know you all, and I trust you all. You are no traitors. The secret is—I am going to be married." She stopped expectantly, but that was too old, and we showed no surprise. "Are you struck dumb, girls?" she demanded, after a pause. "Any questions?" "Yes, O yes, Eliza." I answered, rather coolly. "Shall we be of the wedding guests?" "No; you won't any of you be wedding guests;" and, a little ruffled, she walked to the lobby, where our wraps were hanging. As we donned them, she asked, curiously: "And have you no desire to know who is to be the 'happy go lucky' with me in June?" "O, Joel, of course," we answered; "Joel always—Joel ever." "Ah, yes," she murmured, "Joel always—Joel ever. He's the man, friends; don't forget," and she ran lightly out into the broad hall, down the stone steps, we following hurriedly after, not at all sorry that Joel and Eliza were at last to "step off." But we were sorry and surprised, both, when afterward we found it all out—how that Joel and Eliza had been together so much that he could find no time to pursue his studies. With Eliza or his profession he must part. Shades of Moses! Such discretion, and at his age! He gave up his sweetheart, parted with her for aye, and clung to his musty books. How Eliza really stood the parting no one knows. She was Eliza still, and showed no trace of trouble, but she went no more with Joel. Still, it must have been bitter, for she surely loved Joel. She preferred a full-fledged Esculapius, she said to us when she afterward received the attentions of a noted physician—one of nature's finest and best. But, as I have told you, so it was. Joel wouldn't marry. We girls never thought there was much poetry about Eliza, but, hidden deep in her heart, there must have been a mite of the purest quality, or else she thought a little tenderness woven around this new love would not be amiss, or mayhap she wanted to prove to the meddler that the match itself was one of pure love. Who can tell? Only those who can sound a human heart. Whatever was her motive, Eliza started early in the spring with her aunt and cousin Margie again for Europe. She wished to be married in the selfsame spot where years before her mother had been made a bride.

"Love goes where 'tis sent," and that is why I suppose that Allan Frazer fell in love with Eliza. Gossip's wicked tongue hinted that "a rich father-in-law" was nane sae bad "a thing in the doctor's eye," but I am sure the doctor had lost his heart. Margie wrote us all about the wedding, and this is what she says: "Dear Girls: The doctor arrived two days ago. Yesterday at 10 o'clock four sturdy men commenced, English custom, to ring in joyous peals" the golden wedding bells for Allan Frazer, and Eliza, his bride. They rang, rang, and rang, and last night their chimes were the last sounds of the waking world I heard. The bans had been published every Sunday for six weeks, so what in America would probably have been a secret was here as public that every villager had a seat early in the time beaten, ivy grown church, to witness the marriage. One old woman waited at the door with her basket of flowers; when the pair came in she scattered them in the aisle before them. Pinned to the altar railing, just where they knelt, were two lovely nosegays. As they came out after the ceremony, I noticed the doctor had carried his with him. He looked so happy, girls; there is no doubt but that he married the one on whom his heart doted. And I want you to disabuse your mind of one idea which I know you have, that Eliza had no love to give to Allan. She loves him well, I know. About Joel, I do not well understand, but Eliza is not one of the maidens who, 'like moths, are caught by the glare,' and she must have detected the dross. But it is much better as it is, and I foretell many good things for them. We return together after Allan finishes his course in the German hospitals. Adieu. MARGIE."

Joel did not seem in the least hurt by the marriage, and as he dropped completely out of Eliza's life then, I want to say that he became a prosperous and successful physician. He married not so many years after, and to one of "we girls" Joel was well enough, but Eliza did O! so much better when she linked her life with Allan Frazer's for he was counted one of the "lovely joys of the learned sort," while Joel was only well enough. The party from Germany came home after a time, and Dr. Frazer resumed his practice. Eliza had changed very much, and by the time she had become mother to little Margie, we all agreed that school girls were deceptive and she known as "Eliza, the cruel," in the class of '70 was the most deceptive of all. We had at last learned to believe her a good woman. But her love for the doctor was a question which we debated still, but that was settled for us, too, in good time. One day Eliza told me the cemetery had been disturbed. A body had been snatched from the grave, and everybody was trying to find the perpetrator. Dr. Frazer being a physician, and therefore open to suspicion, was especially interested in having the matter thoroughly sifted. He urged the measures for discovery earnestly, but nothing resulted, excepting the fact that the villains were strangers in the neighborhood. A day or two after Eliza dropped the doctor at one of his country patients while she drove on for a ride, expecting to call for him at another place not far from the first. It was beautiful out and Eliza drove along the river road enjoying the woody air and listening to the bird notes echoing through the dimly lighted woods until the sun was near its setting. She turned her horse then for home, but "I had tarried too long girls," she said, as she told the tale afterward, "listening to the sweet nothings of the evening, and when I returned, I drove the doctor's 'quarter horse' his best, as I supposed, but I found later he could go one better." Eliza still used slang. "Before I reached the second turn off road two men came from somewhere all in a minute, and motioned me to stop. I did so at once. They asked for Dr. Frazer. I did not stop to think, but said hastily that I expected to meet him every minute, and, if I did not, should wait for him at the next turn road. Miss Naylor used to insist that 'nothing called for a lie,' but I tell you, girls, it was lucky I said that; but when one of them climbed into the buggy without so much as 'by your leave,' I began to wish I had clung to the truth. In truth, I was frightened. You've seen him since, and know how much I had to frighten me. 'So you expect to meet the doctor pretty soon, ma'am?' asked one of the men. I answered, "Yes," without any hesitation, instinct teaching me, "but he is with a sick man just down the next turn road. I was to wait until 6 o'clock where the road turns, and he would be there or else remain over night. Is he needed?" He stooped over me, gritting his teeth. "Yes, he is needed. We are the fellows what made an honest living out of the dead. We snatched a body the other night and came pretty near being nabbed, all on account of a meddling doctor, and we are going to grind him—hang him this very night. He'll make a fine subject, and we a fine penny." I felt a queer change in my face, I suppose I grew pale. "What have I done?" was all I could say, and the man chuckled the answer, "Done? why you've done for him, that's all." We had been riding all this time, and just then reached the place where the road turns down to Odd's Clearing. The other man joined us, and there we three waited—waited for what? My watch said half past 6; the man shook the reins and we went down toward the boggy, dismal gloominess of Odd's Clearing. I said not a word. I was glad to move somewhere. On the left a faint glimmering light showed, and the horse halted as if it had reached a usual stopping place. "Is that it?" one of them asked. I shook as if chilled. He did not wait for the answer I could never have said, but left the buggy and went toward the light; the other held the reins. Imagine my condition, girls, if you can. Alone in the darkness with two men who meant to kill my husband. No help, no aid for him either, standing still or going forward. Is it strange that I gave vent to one piercing, hysterical scream? It frightened the horse; he reared, turned the buggy like on a pivot, and the next moment we were homeward bound, going so fast I could hardly get my breath." "I heard a crash when we started, but whether the man made an effort to stop me or whether he dashed into the bushes to his companion I don't know. I was off. We got somewhere on the main road when we met a man" "The horse, checking his wild running, whinnied, and the doctor's voice hailed me. The doctor says I fainted. At any rate, I don't know how I finished the ride home nor anything else much that night." "Never tell a lie, girls. Don't ever." I have, but mine was to save my dear husband's life. Odd's Clearing was a tangle of huge old logs, tall grass and marshy places. Happy the stranger who could extricate himself in the broad day from its folds! Before morning it was surrounded and the two men captured. Eliza had led them to prison. She identified them, and the body snatchers suffered for their crimes. Since that night's ride we have no doubt of Eliza, and know that her assertion, "Every hair in Allan's head is precious to me," is true.

Proposed Railroad Legislation.

Railroad Gazette: The propositions before the legislature prescribe fixed maximum rates so low that there could be no modification of them to suit circumstances, which is a fatal objection to any tariff. Some of the proposed rates would starve to death every railroad in Minnesota. One makes the rate for the great bulk of Minnesota freight ¾ cent per ton per mile for distances over seventy miles; another allows 1 cent per ton per mile on grain, etc., for distances over 200 miles, but allows only ⅔ cent on lumber and fuel for distances over 100 miles. Of course it is not possible to say what the average rate would be, but for roads like the Northern Pacific and the Manitoba there is a haul of 200 miles and more on by far the larger part of their freight On the Northern Pacific in the year to June 30, 1881, the average expense per mile per ton was about 1.40 cents; on the Manitoba, 1.21; on the Minneapolis & St. Louis, 1.12; on the St. Paul & Omaha, 0.97 cent; on the whole system of the Milwaukee & St. Paul, in the calendar year 1881, about 1.08 cents; on the Chicago & Northwestern, in the year to May 31 last, about 0.80 cent. The two last named roads have lines with heavy traffic out of Minnesota, on which the expense must be very much less than the average, and certainly not half as great as on their newer Minnesota lines.

The State of Minnesota has a railroad commissioner, and if the roads where the people complain of the rates are making extravagant profits he ought to be able to investigate and find it out, and tell whether the people who live on the western half of the Southern Minnesota, the Winona & St. Peter, the St. Paul & Omaha, the Hastings & Dakota and the lines in the Red River valley are paying an extortionate rate of interest on the cost of the lines which serve them. But to reduce the rates on those lines because the companies which own them have elsewhere in Minnesota or out of it some other lines which pay well will certainly be most unjust. It has been necessary to wait ten years before getting a profit from some of the Minnesota roads, and the owners are entitled to a large one because of the delay, and certainly should not be compelled to accept a reduction of the income from their latest investments [illegible]

OVER THE WAY.

She smoothes out her tresses
That ripple and gleam,
And little she guesses
I watch her, and dream
Of wild orange flowers
And wedding bells gay,
And honeymoon hours
Over the way.

From her lattice she sings
Of a brave young knight,
A happy faith brings
With splendor bedight,
And birds by the dozen
Give heed to the lay,
And envy their cousin
Over the way.

Though a man overmuch
Inclined to his books,
With never a touch
Of knight in his looks,
Yet all without armor
Or banner at play,
I could die for my charmer
Over the way.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

The Science of Patching.

At Aberdeen, Scotland, there was held recently one of those exhibitions, half market, and half museum, in which the soul of the canny Scot delights. There was a display of the conquests of Scottish housewifery over the accidents that befall apparel; in other words, a department was devoted to the exhibition of skillful work in patching and darning. Your Scot likes to have his attire of the best material, and the women believe in woolens that will hold water and silks that will stand without assistance. Then, when the garment is made, it is expected to last about a lifetime, and an accidental rent is regarded as something that calls for repair and not renewal. Here, accordingly, is shown an India shawl in which a long slit has been burned. Skillful hands have worked carefully over the fabric, and so faithfully has the pattern been followed that at the distance of a yard the place where the shawl was darned could not be discovered. A swallow-tailed coat, in the skirt of which an obtrusive nail had made havoc, has a square patch so deftly inserted as to be invisible save to the keenest vision. Costly silken hose in elaborate patterns, darned in a hundred places, defy the closest inspection of the curious who desire to find where the holes really were. So in hundreds of diverse instances displayed in this exhibition the genius of Aberdeen housewives for economy has enabled them to rescue from the rag-bag valuable material whose defects might be hidden only by dexterous patching. They cultivate this art as an incidental development of the same native shrewdness that prevents their husbands and brothers from rushing hastily into any important enterprise, and makes the thrifty Scot an exemplar of provident yet not avaricious economy.

The great majority of American women do not believe in this sort of thing. If in all the multitudinous county fairs that yearly possess the land there should be set apart a space for exhibitions of darning or patching, there would scarcely be found any one credulous enough to believe that entries of meritorious work of this kind would be made. The matron of an American household manages affairs far differently. Whatever shows signs of wear, or is accidentally injured in outward appearance, is too often ruthlessly consigned to the old clothes heap, to be exchanged ere many days for a 10-cent wash basin or a sheet-iron stewpan. So firmly fixed among American women has the theory become that a hole is better than a patch, because one may be the result of accident, while the other is a confession of conscious parsimony, that you may see almost any day on the streets young damsels, mature matrons, aye, and gray-haired grandmothers as well, whose silken attire on close inspection displays a tell-tale raggedness here or there, which speaks in mute eloquence of a common carelessness. To these women, be they vivacious or demure, gracious or æsthetic, a darned spot is condemned in its existence even as the blood on the guilty fingers of Macbeth's wife, while a patch is dreaded as though it were a flaming bar sinister, telling of unspeakable disgrace.

The essential unsoundness of these opinions, not only when held by the gentler sex with regard to the humble patch, but also when applied to that array of small economies by which the frugal-minded increase their store without decrease of comfort, is apparent when they are considered with reference either to immediate or prospective good. When achievement takes the place of carelessness there is always gain to the individual. The future has something certain and tangible in store, too, for those who waste not. There has taken root in the American consciousness a general conviction that independence of fortune can only be secured by some grand stroke, some brilliant conception, which at one discloses how the flower, ease, may be suddenly plucked from the nettle, toil. Such an error deserves only to be cast out, root and branch. To save, steadily, persistently and with self-denial, will be better for the master of an American home than to live up to his income, expecting meanwhile that some scheme will be hit upon that will bring returns unparalleled. And the American housewife may amply commend her own judgment if, in studying the manifold phases of household economy, she imitates the example of the Aberdeen women, who have put into such skillful practice the science of patching.

How to Occupy Winter Leisure.

January and February are months wherein farmers and gardeners have more leisure than at any other season—a period of hibernation which comparatively few properly appreciate, or employ to advantage. Having closed up his affairs for the past year, balanced accounts with all with whom he had any dealings, and ascertained, moreover, whether his farming operations have proved advantageous, the average soil cultivator should now be prepared to improve and enjoy the weeks or months of leisure which may elapse before the time for actively opening the spring campaign. Much of this leisure may very properly be devoted to rest and recreation, including social visits to near and distant friends and relatives, the attainment of useful knowledge and mental improvement. In addition to the social enjoyment afforded to visiting, a farmer may often obtain useful hints and valuable suggestions, by comparing experiences with visitors or those visited. An examination of stock, implements, and machines, and a discussion of new modes of culture or management adopted, may develop information of much value on practical points, and hence every farmer should keep both eyes and ears wide open on visiting those engaged in the same occupation.

This is peculiarly the reason for acquiring information pertaining to rural affairs and management. It is not only the time for fireside readings and debates, and out-door talks and comparisons (in barns and sheds, beside the stock, and in fields, orchards and gardens, viewing improvements, if the weather permits), but also for attending the meetings and participating in the discussions of farmers' clubs and institutes, as well as taking part in the proceedings at the annual gatherings of agricultural societies. These and other modes of recreation and mental improvement are within easy reach of farmers of the present day, so that none need lack opportunity to occupy their time to more or less advantage. Indeed, there is no occasion for the farmer to doze away leisure days and evenings listlessly—perhaps in drinking cider or something more "ardent," and spinning yarns, while so many useful books and journals are easily to be had, and public gatherings with laudable objects in view may be attended in almost every neighborhood. There are other ways in which one's time may be profitably employed at this season, but we need not suggest matters that will occur to the intelligent reader as eminently worthy of adoption by those desirous of advancing the welfare of individuals, families and communities.

Suggestions.

Chamois leather is used for decorative purposes. It is so soft and pliable that it can be very easily embroidered; in addition it answers very well for designs in dry color.

Some of the most beautiful carving by ladies is carried out in cedar wood. It is especially adapted for glove boxes and other small articles.

The newest designs for doilies are made up of geometrical figures, interlinked rings, triangles and other forms.

Delicately tinted card-board three-fold miniature screens are used for menu cards. They are beautifully decorated, each panel bearing a different floral or emblematic device. The outer one, if possible, should have as a decoration the monogram of the guest by whose plate it is placed.

Husk Mats.

A good husk mat for the outside back door is exceedingly useful, and saves much dirt on the carpet inside. To make one, take corn husks, pick out the longest and best ones, dampen them in water so that they will braid well, then braid them in three strands. Each time you put in a fresh husk let a small bunch of the ends stick up about three inches. [illegible] stand mat. Sew it to a round or oval shape with a strong cord and darning needle. After it is finished, trim the tops of the husks off evenly with the scissors, and it is ready for use.

Kitchen Keramics.

The old time tea-party was not considered first class, or, as we say now, "good form," unless there appeared on the table the basket of gold and silver cake which was the highest achievement possible for the cook of the day. The following recipes have been handed down for several generations, and if made with care, these cakes are almost as good now as then; For the gold cake, take the yolks of eight eggs, beaten till very light, two cups of white sugar, half a cup of butter, half a cup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, and half a teaspoonful of soda. Put the cream of tartar in the milk, and stir it vigorously; dissolve the soda in a teaspoonful of hot water, and add it to the milk; while it is foaming stir it and nearly three cups of flour in with the butter and sugar; flavor with lemon, and bake in one long, narrow loaf. For the silver cake use the whites of the eight eggs; beat them to a stiff froth—"Beat them," my grandmother used to say, "until you can turn the platter upside down with them on and they not run off" (it may be well to mention that she never allowed that experiment to be made practical); beat two cups of sugar and a half a cup of butter to a cream, then add a cup of milk, three cups of flour, and cream of tartar and soda as for the gold cake. Flavor with almond extract. Bake this also in a long, narrow tin, so that the slices of both cakes will be of the same size. If one prefers to use baking powder in place of cream of tartar and soda, it may be done; for the gold cake use two teaspoonfuls of powder, and for the silver cake one.

Here is a recipe for a delicious pudding: Mix three teaspoonfuls of baking powder with one quart of flour; chop a quarter of a pound of suet very fine, also one cup of raisins and one of currants; pour over the fruit a cup of molasses, a teaspoonful of mixed spice (cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg, or mace), and one cup of milk; then gradually stir in the flour. This makes a stiff batter, but none too much so, as the pudding will have more body than if the batter is thinner; when every lump of flour is stirred out put the batter in a pudding-dish, and steam for four hours. The sauce which is best suited for this pudding is made in this way: Put four tablespoonfuls of white sugar in a basin on the top of the stove; add to it one tablespoonful of water; stir it every moment until it begins to be of a light brown color; then take it from the fire, add enough wine to make the requisite amount of sauce; thicken with a little arrowroot or cornstarch; sugar can be added also if the wine is a sour wine.

This dish may be new to some cooks, and it is an excellent one to make for supper: Take equal quantities of cold boiled ham and veal, chop them fine, not at the same time, but keep them separate; boil say half a dozen eggs hard, and chop them also; then in a pudding-dish put a layer of veal, sprinkle pepper and salt over it, and moisten it with water or with a little Worcestershire sauce; then put a layer of ham, and then of eggs, with pepper and salt over them. Keep on in this way until the dish is full or your material is used up. If the ham had some fat on it you will not need to add any butter; but if not, put a few lumps of butter on the top, cover the pudding dish and bake slowly for four hours. Then take it from the oven, set it in a cool room with a heavy weight on top. By tea time it ought to be cold and firm enough to cut in thin, smooth slices. It is best though to make this the day before you need to use it.

The leisure moments that may be enjoyed during the lenten season are especially adapted to spring sewing and to needle work generally; now, if ever, the mother of small children can give some time to the ornamentation of their belongings, and, as the middle of winter is safely passed, she may look forward to the pleasant days when baby may set out on his short pilgrimage in the park, or up and down the street in front of the house: he will need a pretty robe to lay across his lap, and now is a good time to make it. One pretty way is to get a piece of white or drab linen momie cloth, and put on some pleasing picture, either in outline stitch or it may be etched with good effect. Another way is to get a piece of the white canvas, which is woven in blocks, and on each alternate block work a little figure. One that I had seen had a different figure on each block, and it would appear to furnish amusement for an observing baby for a good many hours.

Shoulder quilts are quite the fashion now—that is, quilts about half the size of an ordinary one. Very pretty ones to lay across the foot of the bed are made of the thin cheese-cloth. The nicest cotton is needed for these quilts, or the dark spots in the cheaper qualities will show through the thin covering. These small comforters should be tacked close together, and this may be done with any bright colors, and the edge may be bound simply, or it may have a crocheted edge, or be trimmed with lace. These little quilts can be washed, and if well shaken after it, and hung where they will dry quickly, they will look like new again. Small quilts can be made, too, of other material. Many women, probably, have old silk dress skirts laid away which would do good service if made up in this form.

Housekeepers complain that the apples are entirely tasteless this year; that the sauce made with them has no flavor. The following recipe for sauce is said to be excellent: Cut some hard apples in quarters, or smaller pieces still, after peeling them; put them in a jar, with plenty of sugar and white ginger root, cut fine, scattered over them; the best way, perhaps, being to put in a layer of apples, and then of the sugar and ginger. In two or three days pour in enough water to entirely dissolve the sugar; then strain this juice, and, putting the apples in it, let them stew slowly until they are tender. If the apples are carefully treated, they will not lose their shape. Serve when cold. This is very good with meat.

"M. S. D." contributes this excellent recipe for a plum pudding: Three cups of sifted flour, three eggs, a wine glass of molasses (this will give it a dark color), one and a half pints of milk, one large cup of suet, chopped very fine, one cup of currants and one of raisins; add mace, cloves and cinnamon to suit your taste, one teaspoonful of soda, and two of cream of tartar; boil for at least two hours and a half, but three is still better. The two and a half are sufficient to cook it, but the other half hour's boiling gives a certain lightness to the pudding, which is greatly to be desired. Eat with any good pudding sauce.

A correspondent asks how to make caper sauce; this recipe may be confidently followed: Chop a tablespoonful of capers, and mix with a quarter of a pint of melted butter; add a little cayenne pepper; let this cook for three or four minutes, then add a teaspoonful of flour rubbed smooth in three tablespoonfuls of cold water; let this come to a boil. If you choose to do so, add a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce; it imparts an agreeable flavor. Of course this quantity can be increased indefinitely, if the proportions are preserved.

A simple but good blackberry pudding is made by taking half a cup of butter and lard mixed, one cup of sugar, one egg, one cup of sweet milk, and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat the sugar, butter and egg together till light; then add the sweet milk and flour enough to make a batter of medium thickness. Then stir in as many blackberries as you can afford to put in. Do not put much juice in. Keep that to flavor mince meat with. Bake for an hour.

The layer cake so popular now, made of two layers of white cake with one of fruit cake in the middle, may be varied deliciously by making the middle layer of walnut cake. For this, if the cake is a large one, take two-thirds of a cup of sugar, one-third of a cup of butter, one cup of flour, one egg, one teaspoonful of baking powder, and nearly one cup of hickory-nut meats.

A pretty way to make a border for a patchwork quilt is to piece one narrow strip of straight bits of silk; sew this to the quilt; then put around it a row of blocks matching the center of the quilt; and outside of this put a wide strip similar to the narrow one. The effect is very pretty, and this is a good way to utilize the strip of silk left not used in the blocks.

Here is a recipe for steamed brown bread: One quart of Indian meal, one pint of rye flour; stir these together and add one quart of sweet milk, one cup of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of soda; add a little salt, and steam for four hours.

Brass chains in oval links are made for looping back curtains. They are especially adapted for heavy curtains and portieres, and add much to the elegance of the drapery, particularly when the material is dark colored.

A pretty splasher is made of linen, embroidered with colored working cottons in outline stitch. The design represents ducks in water, with the inscription above, "Go and do likewise."

HOPE ON, AND FAINT NOT.

A few more days of sorrow,
A few more nights of gloom,
And then a cloudless morrow,
And one eternal noon.

A few more fields of welfare,
On this terrestrial ball,
The comes a welcome furlough,
And Christ has conquered all.

A few more times of faltering,
Of failure and of sin,
Then Christ our precious offering
Shall bid us enter in.

Our well-meant life endeavor
(Though foes denied its aim),
Shall end in joy forever,
Through faith in Jesus' name.

We seek no bed of roses,
No duty fail to share,
Thus when this warfare closes
A victor's palm we'll bear.

Then courage, wearied brother,
Delay is not defeat;
Your crown give not another
By cowardly retreat.

Lo! from the master, hearing
The promise and command,
No counsel take of fearing;
But overcome, and stand.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

A "Peculiar People."

There is a sect of religionists in England, and perhaps also in this country, known as "Peculiar People," one of whose cardinal doctrines is that it is contrary to the commands of Scripture to call in a physician in sickness. They believe that prayer and annointing are the only means of cure allowed by God. One of the votaries of this belief in London not long ago allowed his child to die without calling in a physician, and being tried for it was indicted for manslaughter by a coroner's jury, which would seem to be a proper verdict. But a sharp critic has written a letter to the London Echo about the verdict which has the following statement: "The inspiration of the Bible and the absolute necessity of putting blind and unresisting faith in its commands is a cardinal doctrine of every Christian sect in this country, whether its professors believe merely that the authors of its component books were constrained, in a general way, to write what was revealed to them, or imagine, with Dean Burgess, that the very dots of the i's and punctuation are verbally and literally inspired. Anathemas are fulminated weekly from thousands of pulpits against those who presume to interpret for themselves, and obey or disobey, at their pleasure, perfectly simple, straightforward and intelligible commands; and surely, that contained in James v.: 14-15, is as definite, both as a command and a promise, as it can by any possibility be. And yet, when a man dares to exercise that faith, the necessity for which is persistently being dinned into his ears, an 'intelligent jury' of his countrymen brings in a verdict against him that he has committed a crime, conviction of which before a competent criminal tribunal might entail on him a long term of penal servitude. We must not be supposed to sympathize with any form of religious profession which repudiates medical aid. We think that in the case which has given rise to these remarks, it is much to be deplored that the unfortunate child was not attended by a skilled physician; but, after all, the bereaved parents only did what millions of their fellow-countrymen are exhorted, commanded and entreated, Sunday after Sunday, to do—followed out unhesitatingly the definite teaching of the Bible. Perhaps, though, the Borough jury thought that the commands and precepts of the book are (on week days) to be interpreted merely in a parliamentary sense; and that the cynic who said, 'by want of faith are ye saved in this world' was right after all." If the old traditional theories about Biblical inspiration are correct it would seem that these misguided people are really only carrying out, according to their idea, a divine command.

Questions on a Sunday School.

It is well known to be a dangerous thing to ask too many questions in a Sunday school. A clergyman recently went into his Sunday school to talk to the scholars. "Now, my little dears," he commenced as he stood on the platform rubbing his hands complacently together, "I want all of you who never swear or use bad language to stand up." All but two small boys immediately rose to their feet, and although the teacher urged them to do likewise, they retained their seats. The minister cast his glances toward the little fellows, paused a few moments, and then, after waving back the children to their seats, repeated the request in this wise: "Now, all of you who love to go to Sunday school, who love the Saviour, who love your parents, who never do anything that you know to be wrong, rise." Again all but the two boys rose to their feet promptly. "Little boys," then said the minister, addressing himself particularly to them, "cannot you rise, too, on that question?" "No, sir," promptly replied the elder of the two. "Why no; why not, boys? What do you think will become of you if you do all the bad things I have just mentioned. The boys shrugged their shoulders uneasily for a few moments, and then when the whole school had simmered down to a profound quietness the elder said saucily: "Well, sir, my mamma said that we should be both ministers one of these days if we kept on!" The next order of business was taken up without further delay.

Teaching the Zulus.

The Rev. William Mellen, a returned missionary from Zululand, says that it is very hard to convert and instruct the Zulus, because they want nothing. "They crawl into their low huts, lie down on a mat with their feet to the central fire, and sleep with their heads on blocks. That is the height of happiness, and their hearts desire nothing more. They at first look upon clothes of all kinds as impediments, and in square houses with several rooms feel lost and uneasy. We first teach them the benefits of a hats. They feel the heat of the sun upon their heads, and hold up their shields for shade. A hat is to them a shield which fits the head. I find that if a man wants one thing and has it supplied, he straightway wants two or three things more. Soon our negro wants boots to protect his feet from the sharp stones, and the wearing of a shirt reconciles him to the use of light clothing. He may be the bearer of a letter from one missionary to another, and he marvels exceedingly that the man seems to be talking with the paper while it talks with him. He then wants to know if paper can talk, and how it can do so is explained to him. He now feels an intellectual want, and is taught to read and write. We then talk to him of Heaven, and he wishes to know how he can get there. He never thought of such a thing before, but he now feels a spiritual want, and it is supplied."

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

We work together, if far apart;
Loyal and strong is each servant's heart;
One is our Master, Christ the Lord,
And we catch the sound of his guiding word,
And onward go where he shows the way,
Till we stand with him in the perfect day.

The Young Men's Christian association has paid a great deal of attention to work among railroad employes throughout the country. This work, begun only a few years ago in a very small way, has grown until it now has branches on many leading roads, with fifty-six secretaries or superintendents devoting all their time to the care of these branches. Reading rooms, libraries, parlors, amusement rooms, bath rooms, classes for instruction and hospital equipment, are among the Christian agencies employed. The work has commanded the interest and approval of railroad managers to such an extent that these secretaries are most of them on the pay rolls of the companies, the corporations thus co-operating with their employes in making the work efficient in all its branches, social, educational and religious.

Missouri reports five counties in which only one-third of all the children of school age attend Sunday school. In one of the counties the proportion is even smaller, being only 550 out of a population of 5,500 children, or but one-tenth. As this is the State where the robber, Jesse James, was made a hero, and where his brother was interviewed and feasted, and begged for his autograph, instead of being hung, this fact is not at all surprising. The two circumstances have a very close natural connection.

So far as is known, the Baptist Sunday schools in this country number about 14,500, though the Baptist churches number over 26,000. In the schools reported there are, in round numbers, 120,000 officers and teachers, and over 1,000,000 scholars. That these figures fall far below the numbers actually engaged in Sunday school work is evident, since the membership of the Baptist churches is not less than 2,500,000. Conversions among the scholars are not reported till the conversions have been baptized and have united with the churches. The number reported in [illegible] was over 15,000 a year.

Several of the Congregational ministers of Hartford, Conn., have decided to use the ritual of the Episcopal church for the burial of the dead, when the services are held at private houses, and to refrain from remarks upon the life and character of the deceased; if a sermon is desired delivering it at some subsequent time.

Bishop Whipple, on a recent visitation to the Indian department of his missionary diocese, administered the communion to 247 Chippewa Indians. Fifteen years ago there was scarcely one communicant among them. There are eight churches in the Chippewa mission, and one now being built will cost $10,000.

By the death of the bishop of Llandaff, and the appointment of the bishop of Truro to the archbishopric of Canterbury, the bishop of Rochester, who was consecrated in 1877, will obtain a seat in the house of lords, the bishop of Lichfield, who was consecrated in 1878, being the next entitled to a summons.

There are 193 Congregational churches in Wisconsin, with a total membership of 12,905. The additions during the past year were 923, of which 525 were on confession of faith, and the contributions amounted to $16,830.

There are nearly 21,000 Sunday schools connected with the Methodist Episcopal church. The number has doubled since 1857, and on an average, four new schools are organized every week.

The Sabbath morning collections in the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, Rev. Dr. Barrows, pastor, for the past year amounted to $16,500, an average of $318 for each Sabbath.

The Methodist church at Hampden, near Baltimore, has been favored with a revival, in which there were 216 professed conversions, and 198 persons added to the church.

The grand tower of Peterborough cathedral, England, which was erected in 1350, has been condemned as unsafe, and is to be removed at an expense of $200,000.

The First Congregational church of Pittsfield, Mass., have decided to use a responsive service, similar to that used at the Church of the Pilgrims, at Brooklyn.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

A FRAGMENT.

A little boy and a little sled,
These two;
The little sled was painted red
And blue;
The little boy wore Knickerbockers,
And was sliding "belly whoppers,"
Poor lad!

This boy, he scaled the hill, he did,
Way up;
Then down the hill, this boy, he slid,
Kerslup!
That painted sled, it struck a rock,
That boy is just now out of stock;
Too bad!

They searched the ground for miles around,
Alas!
Before his busted bones they found,
A mass,
That twelve or fifteen counties cluttered,
Where once that boy had "belly guttered."
Oh my!

Now, little boys who go to slide,
Take care!
Remember how this poor boy died!
Beware!
If you must go and slide kerslup
Walk down the hill and then slide up
Good bye.

MY VALENTINE.

I'll tell you of a little maid
I've chosen for my Valentine;
She is not very wise or staid,
And numbers years from seven to nine.
But truth looks from her eyes of blue,
And oh, her voice has music in it:
I'm speaking only strictly true;
You'd surely think 'twas lark or linnet.

She always does just what she should,
Without a fuss or bother:
So nice, so loving, and so good,
You scarce could find another.
And so for my sweet Valentine
I choose this little darling maid,—
My dearest daughter, seven to nine,
Who is not very wise or staid.

A Little Girl's Rebuke.

Alice was sitting all alone in the parlor. She grew tired of playing with her doll Chirp; so she went to the window to look out. It was snowing fast, and all was still in the street. After watching a few moments she saw a lame old man go by. He walked with crutches, and limped as if in pain.

"Poor man," sighed little Alice, "how I do pity you!" Just then she heard a shout of laughter, and two snowballs flew past the window. One of them struck the old man on the neck; he gave a cry of pain. Then the two boys who threw the snowballs began to laugh and hurrah. The lame man turned and spoke to them, but they only laughed the more. Then they began to pelt him again.

"You bad boys," said Alice to herself; "how I wish my papa was here to give you a good whipping." Saying this, Alice started up. She had a sudden thought. She slipped on her little cloak and hat in a hurry, and ran out the front door. The boys were just about to throw some more snowballs at the poor man.

"Little boys," cried Alice, as she ran up to them, "how would you like it if your papa was lame, and some bad boys throw snowballs at him?" The boys stared. They did not know what to make of this. Alice spoke very sweetly to them, and they were ashamed. They turned about and ran away as fast as they could. The lame man looked back and said, "God bless you, little miss," as Alice went up the steps. Just then she saw the two boys watching her from the corner.

The next day Alice was sitting with her mother, when the door-bell rang loudly. Then they heard steps going swiftly away. "It must be those bad boys again," said Alice. Her mother went to the door and came back smiling.

In her hand she held a little wooden puppy that barked. "I think you gave the boys a good lesson, little daughter," she said. Around the puppy's neck a card was tied, and on it these words were printed: "For a nice little lady. From Tommy and Dick."

A Defaulting Farmer.

Lake City Herald: There is very considerable excitement at Millville and vicinity, over the recent developments respecting Ole C. Fremo's affairs. Ole left the day after election for Dakota, to attend to his interests near Aberdeen, promising to be back in three weeks; the weeks lengthened into as many months, and still he did not put in an appearance, and last week the officers of the Lake City bank came to the conclusion that it was time for them to look after a chattel mortgage of some $1,600 which the bank held on Ole's grain; they sent out an agent to foreclose the aforesaid mortgage, and he was not largely troubled with the job. There was on the farm about fifty bushels of poor barley and about enough oats to feed the teams a week and that was all. The agent went sorrowfully home and made his report. By that time our friend Gregg, who has some interest in Ole and a chattel mortgage on cattle and horses to secure him, and Representative Emery, who is a good second to Gregg on the same property, took the alarm, and on Friday they went out and made a tolerably clean sweep of things. And now the mourners go about the streets. Fremo's liabilities are estimated at not less than $12,000, with assets of perhaps one-half that amount, and a number of better men than he are liable to come to grief in consequence of having signed their names to his paper, just as a matter of form. His friends are, or pretend to be, confident that he will be back very soon and fix things, and perhaps he will.

A Corpse for a Driver.

Winnipeg Free Press: Frank Morrow arrived in town Sunday night. He reports that on the 31st of last month, while he was driving from Gladstone to Westbourne he met, about three miles west of the latter place, a team driven by a man enveloped in a buffalo coat. Something in the man's appearance attracted his attention, and he shouted to him, but received no answer. Then Mr. Morrow turned back and stopped the team. On shaking the driver he found him frozen stiff, whereupon he turned the team around and took it to Westbourne. The dead man's name was John Robinson, and his parents live a short distance south of Gladstone. So far as could be gathered, he had left Portage la Prairie in a semi-intoxicated condition, and as he had a jar of liquor with him, probably indulged too freely on the way, and fell an easy prey to the cold wind which swept over the prairie. When found, his fur coat was unbuttoned, and there was every indication that his death was attributable to exposure.

FACTS FOR THE FARMERS.

Weeds, Where Do They Come From?

A correspondent from Royalton, Minn., inquires, "Why is it that gardens which have been kept clear of weeds for years will be, each spring, infested with them. Where do they come from?"

A good many have asked this question before, and it is one of the puzzling things in nature to those who have never given it a careful study. Now, how many seeds will a single weed produce? Let us see. It is found by investigation that the common mayweed is set down for 45,000, the daisy for 13,500, the dandelion for 3,000, the dock for 13,000, the thistle for 20,000, the cockle for 2,600, the mustard for 8,000, the burdock, 26,000, etc., etc. Each of these seeds is so thoroughly protected by its hard shell that it is possible for it to lie in the earth for a long series of years—no one can tell how long—without any damage to the germ of life within. It only needs sunshine and air to develop it. Imagine, now, a field of thousands of separate specimens of any one of the weeds named, or others beside, and see the millions of germs that must be launched on the world each fall, to be scattered by the winds in every direction. Evidently some weed seeds must be indestructible, for varieties not before seen spring up when the ground has been freshly turned—deposited there no one can tell how long before. A piece of new breaking will demonstrate this, producing, as it almost invariably will, the well known "tumble weed," an entirely new weed to the locality. A year ago last fall we seeded down a field to timothy and clover that had failed to catch in the spring. There had been a patch of smart weed in a low portion of it which had gone to seed. As every resident of Minnesota will remember, the season was extremely wet. It rained almost continuously from the 1st of September till the ground was froze, and it would seem as if every individual seed of that smart weed which had been set afloat had sprouted, for in the spring the whole field was so thickly coated with this pest that the grass seed could scarcely be seen. As soon as it had grown enough so that it could be cut it was mowed down, this process kept up through the summer. The timothy and clover finally got a start, and by fall there was a good stand of it. But the immense quantity of smart weed that had started from the original small patch, was a mystery almost unaccountable. The wet season had developed them and showed what a myriad had been set afloat from a small center. In a field some distance away, the year before, was a patch of "bull thistles." The air was filled with the downy seeds for days after they were ripe, and the ground in every direction was thickly covered with a white carpet of seeds. We expected to see about a million of new thistles last year, but fortunately they did not sprout, though the seeds will, many of them undoubtedly lie dormant to spring up at some future time when the conditions are favorable. The moral of all this is that constant vigilance is the price of clean fields. An hour's work on the young shoots is equivalent to a day's labor later on; and the farmer can take what comfort he choses from the thought that there are buried millions of fresh weeds still unsprouted, ready to come up smiling just as soon as he folds his hands for a rest.

Why Are the Prices of Butter Declining?

There seem to be a general complaint among the butter-makers just now that the price of butter does not keep as it always does at this season. Good butter-makers who have been getting 30 cents a pound have to be content with 20 and 25 cents, and no combination of cold weather, snow blockades, scarcity, or excellence of material seems to affect the price. Why? We answer, Because the Eastern demand is falling off. And how is this? On account of the production of so much lard butter, or oleomargarine. Factories are springing up everywhere, and hundreds of thousands of pounds are now being launched on the public weekly. We have not the full statistics at hand, but somewhere in the neighborhood of $7,000,000 worth was produced in this country last year, which is equivalent to 25,000,000 or 30,000,000 pounds. In spite of all legislation to the contrary, the demand for it is growing and the objections to it are fast being overcome. It bids fair to take the place of milk butter to a large extent, and we fear the day of high prices for butter makers is almost past. It is stated that a tub of it was received by a leading dealer in Minneapolis recently, who placed it with a lot of other butter to have it tested by retail dealers. No marks were put on it to designate it, and more than a dozen good judges who came in to buy selected this tub as the best of the lot. A Wisconsin paper publishes an interview on this subject with a number of Chicago dealers, in which the following statements are made:

The first firm called upon is one which is known throughout Northern Illinois as extensive manufacturers of butter and cheese—operating a number of factories—as well as extensive dealers and exporters. After some general talk the question was asked:

"Are not the general conditions of the butter market as favorable for an advance as at this time last year?"

"Yes, they are," replied the dealer. "I think, perhaps, the markets are not quite as clear of stock as then, but in a general way they can be said to be about as favorable."

"Then why is the market stagnant, and prices declining?" was asked.

"Why, lard butter, sir, lard butter, that's what ails it. Don't you know that I can show you now some lard butter that can 'knock the socks' off ordinary creamery, and which can be bought for so much less as to make it a big object to handle it."

On being asked where the butter was that could be shown so promptly, the dealer replied:

"Right here in our house; we have a large stock of it."

"Well, is it a fact," asked your correspondent, "that the leading dealers are dealing in bogus butter?"

"Certainly it is so. How do you suppose we could carry on our business if we did not handle it? There isn't a house on the street that does not handle more or less of it, and the one that handles the most is making the most money."

In a semi-apologetic manner the dealer stated further that his house sold the lard butter for what it was, and sold only to Eastern dealers.

The representative of another firm said in answer to some inquiries:

"Yes; we all handle lard butter. It used to be considered disreputable, and it was as much as a man's business was worth to be discovered. In handling it, but now it is considered all right."

"Do we like to handle it? Why, I don't know but what we do; there's money in it. And why isn't it straight? The people know what they are getting, in nine cases out of ten, and take it on its merits."

"Do you brand it?"

"No; but when retailers come to buy they know when they get it; in fact, many of them ask for it, as it pays a better margin than straight butter. So long as consumers get a wholesome article they ought not to complain."

In each of the several commission houses visited, the same reasons for a dull butter market were given, and about the same sentiments regarding the business of handling bogus butter were expressed.

One dealer, who is an extensive exporter of dairy products, was asked what he thought would be the relative position of milk butter and lard butter when the contest between them were ended.

"That," said he, "is just the question that is troubling all of us who take the trouble to look into the future. It does not seem at all likely that lard butter can ever entirely supplant the genuine article, yet just now rapid strides in that direction are being made. It may be that lard butter and others of its kind will have its day and go out of use, but this does not appear probable, as they answer many purposes fully better than milk butter. For cooking purposes good, fresh lard butter is certainly preferable to rancid milk butter. One thing has been fully demonstrated in regard to these bogus butters: They cannot be legislated out of existence, for the present fine quality of lard butter, which enables it to compete so successfully with creamery, is due almost entirely to the attempts made to suppress its manufacture by law. The only thing that can be done, so far as legislating is concerned, is to have a system of strict inspection established which shall brand everything that comes into the market, and require it to be sold by retailers from the vessel in which it was branded with the brand in plain sight."

In all probability oleomargarine will be introduced into St. Paul and Minneapolis markets this coming summer, and we would not be surprised to hear of a factory being opened before the season is over. If so, after dairying what? Is this going to be the query among butter makers? It certainly has that appearance now.

The Methodist Mine.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS

Thursday, February 15.

SENATE.—A remonstrance against any reduction of the tariff on books below 25 per cent. signed by the poets Whittier, Holmes and Aldrich, was presented.

The tariff bill was then considered.

A motion to make the duty on foreign ore was lost—18 to 36.

HOUSE—A conference report on the Japanese indemnity fund bill, providing for the return of only the original amount to Japan, etc., was presented to be adopted.

The house then addressed itself to the tariff bill, sugar schedule. At the evening session the legislative appropriation bill was discussed.

Friday, February 16.

SENATE—The conference report on the Japanese idenmity bill was agreed to. The tariff bill coming up, the senate voted 27—to 19—to fixing a duty on charcoal iron $3 per ton in addition to the duty on iron made with other fuel. An amendment abolishing the tax on whisky and brandy was rejected—3 to 60? An amendment abolishing the tax on tobacco, distilled spirits, fermented liquors, etc., was lost.

Mr. Sherman moved to strike out the steel ingot paragraph of the metal clause and substitute therefor the provision of the house schedule. He said the house bill was wiser and better than the senate bill, and for this declaration he was berated by Mr. Beck who said that he (Beck) had never heard the crack of the party whip as loud as he heard it to-night. If the senate was going to be driven in this sort of way and any of the senators were such galley slaves, they should be told after three or four weeks of consideration and after receiving in almost every instance, the acquiescence of the senators from Ohio, the cause. If that senator had telegrams from persons who he thought would vote for him for president if he would stand by them now, and who would bring their wealth to aid him in his political ambitions, let it be done. If the senator could denounce the senate and say Kelley would vote against the bill unless amended in conformity with the house bill, and claim his reward hereafter, let the senate so amend it.

HOUSE—The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill was passed, with amendments reducing the number of internal revenue collection districts to eighty-two and increasing the hours of labor in the executive departments. An amendment to reduce the salaries of the officials except the president and U. S. court judges 10 per cent. was lost, and an amendment prohibiting the payment of any money appropriated for the general land office clerical force to clerks for making out patents to land grant railroads, was ruled out of order. The house then took up the tariff bill, despite the efforts of friends of the whisky bill to have that measure considered. The bill for an additional Dakota supreme court justice was reported from the judiciary committee. The so-called Fourth of July claim bill passed. Bills were introduced appropriating $60,000 for the relief of sufferers from the floods in the Mississippi and Ohio rivers.

Saturday, February, 17.

SENATE—Mr. Vest introduced a resolution providing for a special committee to five senators to examine and report to the next session the condition of the Yellowstone Park contracts and what legislation is necessary to protect the timber or objects of interest, to establish a system of police, and secure the proper administration therein. Mr. Voorhees objected to the consideration of the resolution to-day. Mr. Edmunds advocated the resolution, and said it ought to be passed at once. It went over under the rule.

Mr. Allison gave notice that on Monday he would move to lay aside the tariff bill and proceed with the appropriation bills.

The tariff bill coming up, Mr. Sheridan moved a substitute for the iron and steel clauses of the metal schedule, which was practically the provisions of the house bill on the same subject. A long controversy ensued between Sherman and Beck, and no action was taken on any amendments to the bill.

HOUSE.—The committee on elections reported in favor of the contestant in the Sessinghaus-Frost case (Missouri). Discussion of the tariff bill was resumed. The committee having risen, Mr. Haskell moved that all debate on the bill be closed in one hour. A point of order was raised, and a long and heated discussion took place in which Mr. Dunnell, of Minnesota said: I have been surprised that the house in committee of the whole has kept up its interest as well to this hour with the foreshadowing fact upon us that the bill has no earthly chance of being passed. We have been debating provisions of this bill, and at the same time substantially admitting that the bill would not pass. We have now reached a provision of the bill, which, to me has, been of very great importance, because I have believed that in this clause we are to reach some relief to the people. This paragraph of the bill does provide a reduction of about $11,000,000, yet the very men who would advocate the passage of this bill are themselves admitting that it is not to be passed at this session of congress.

Mr. Dunnell was subsequently very severely rebuked by Mr. Kasson for his continued absence from the committee on ways and means during the consideration of the tariff bill. He denounced the action of his party in having kept up appearances by debate on the bill when it had been secretly agreed that the measure should not pass, but be dropped and gave way to an internal revenue bill.

Monday, February, 19.

SENATE.—The tariff bill being taken up the amendment of Mr. Sherman (from the metal schedule of the house bill) regarding the duty on steel, was adopted after the provision making the duty on steel not especially enumerated or provided for 45 per cent. ad valorem. The vote was 30 to 28 a strict party vote.

Senator McPherson of New Jersey offered an amendment making the duty 40 per cent. ad valorem upon a valuation of 5 cents per pound, 2½ cents per pound, in a valuation of from 5 to 9 cents per pound, and 3½ cents per pound upon a valuation above 9 cents per pound. The last clause fixing a separate duty upon a valuation above 11 cents was stricken out entirely. This amendment proposed by McPherson was addopted.

This is a considerable reduction, and may be illustrated by comparing the present and proposed duty on circular saws. The duty now is 3 1-2 cents per pound and 10 per cent. ad valorem. They are worth in this country about 26 cents per pound. They are worth in England about 20 cents per pound. The compound duty, according to the present rate, will amount to say 5 1-2 cents per pound, while the amendment proposes to reduce it to 3 1-4 cents, or about 14 per cent. ad valorem.

In the executive session the following nominations were conformed.

HOUSE.—This was the day for suspension of rules but not a bill was passed. A motion by Mr. Kelley to suspend the rules and pass a bill to reduce internal revenue taxation was lost—165 to 97 (less than two-thirds in the affirmative.)

A report in the contested election of Cook vs. Cutts (Iowa), in favor of the contestant, was presented. Bills and resolutions were introduced reducing by 15 per cent. the duties on all importations into the United States; to devote surplus money in the treasury to maintain schools and pay debts in various states.

Among the bills that failed to pass was one providing for an appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of a public library. This is the third time in this congress that an attempt has been made to pass a bill for better accommodations for the congressional library. At first it was proposed to purchase a square east of the capitol for the new library building, appropriating $500,000 for the purpose, but the cry of "a job" defeated the bill. The objection was obviated by providing for setting apart a government reservation as a site for the proposed building, but the numerous economists who have suddenly developed in congress interposed and saved the poor people from an expenditure of $500,000.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

Some comment has been made over the fact that the river and harbor bill does not contain an appropriation for the reservoir system at the head waters of the Mississippi. The fact is, Mr. Washburn, who is a member of the commerce committee, did not ask for any owing partly to the delay in the settlement of damages for land overflowed and the fact that enough of the amount appropriated last year has been unexpended to carry on the work for the next year.

It is understood that Secretary Folger has directed Treasurer Gilfillan not to order any more of the five-cent nickels from the mints until their legality can be established. It is claimed that the new nickels do not come within a strict construction of the law creating them, because they do not indicate precisely what amount they represent.

Senator Ingalls of Kansas has written a letter to Dr. Potter, of the New York Baptist Weekly, telling the latter that he is neither a heathen nor an infidel, as the Baptist, and that although he has doubts of whether eternal punishment is consistent with infinite love he is quite sure if there is no hell for such bigoted slanderers and malignant liars as the editor of the Baptist Weekly there ought to be.

The committee on elections completed the consideration of the Cook-Cutts contested election case, Sixth Iowa district, and by a vote of 8 to 2 agreed to report a resolution to the house in favor of seating the contestant, Cook, Greenback-Democrat. Ranney and Pettibone voted for Cutts, Republican.

RAILROAD NEWS NOTES.

Engine 24 of the Midland railroad ran away at Jersey City Tuesday, making a mile in a minute and a half, and crossing a bridge where the rails were removed for repairs, on the stringers, and jumping the track. The fire department was called out to put out the fire in the furnace to prevent an explosion, and the engine was hauled off for repairs.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

A Morris, Stevens county, Minn., special says that during a snow storm, Mary Gilbertson, eighteen years of age, started from the house of one of the neighbors to her home, which was only a short distance. It was found that she had not reached home and search was immediately made, which resulted in finding her in a small clump of bushes so badly frozen that she died very soon after being taken to her father's house. His home is seven miles east of Morris.

At Hancock on the Manitoba line, Joseph Bellaire, fireman on train No. 30, lost one hand and part of the other. He was under the back part of the engine cleaning the fire box; having completed the work he started to crawl out, and just as he had both hands on the rail the engineer started up, causing the accident.

Advices from all the cattle ranges, as complete and specific as can be obained at this time, show that losses by cold, snow, exposure and lack of water, have been severe in Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming, but comparatively small in Montana, where the weather has been milder and the topography of the country affords better protection.

At Wallingford, Conn., Willie Meyer, Willie Howe, and Alice Franks were killed, and Alice Mottram seriously injured, by their sleigh being struck by a locomotive.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

NORTHWESTERN DAIRYMEN.

Meeting of the Northwestern Dairymen at Mankato, Minn.—Delegates from Various States.—Thoughtful Papers from Eminent Men Upon Subjects of Interest to Minnesota Butter Producers.

The northwestern association of dairymen convened on the 14th at Mankato, Minnesota, by invitation of the city council and board of trade. The association represents the dairymen of the four states, Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Illinois, and delegates were present from these and many other states.

The proceedings was opened with an address of welcome by Hon. J. B. Wakefield, M. C. elect, in which he presented the advantages offered for the dairy industry, and complimented those who were forwarding.

Col. R. P. McGlincy, of Illinois responded in a candid manner, assuring the Minnesota farmers that if there was anything that would take a mortgage off their farms in the world, it was the dairy interest.

The annual address of the president, W. D. Hoard, of Fort Atkinson, Wis., was an interesting and able production. He spoke at length of the power of organization, in lowering freights of goods on refrigerator cars, etc. By means of this organization was established the now famous Elgin Dairy board of trade, whose transactions last year amounted to over $200,000,000. Other boards of trade have also been established. By virtue of the three leading associations of the country, the Northwestern, the National Butter association, and the Wisconsin association, the dairymen of the Northwest were enabled to hold a dairy fair last December that eclipsed any previous attempt of the kind in this country. By the aid of this and sister organization the dairy men of the Northwest have become recognized as a living force in the land. Another of its objects is to increase the profit of farming and enhance the productive value of real estate; another, to educate and enlighten the farmer in all that pertains to this branch of agriculture, and thereby increase his respect both for his business and himself. The "betterment" idea lies at the root of dairy farming. Its effect is first on the farmer. It opens to him new possibilities; offers him larger and surer rewards: confronts him with a constant succession of new and fresh ideas; forces him into deeper channels of thought; compels him to become acquainted with the finer economies of all the life that is about him and in the end turns him out of the state a broader and deeper citizen. It is not the soil of Minnesota that need to be shared so much as the brains of her farmers. Your farms exhausted by that vampire wheat and careless management, cry aloud to-day for a change. Your empty pocket books gaspingly plead for it. Your wives and children look for it.

The splendid results of the past seventeen years of labor in this field is justification enough. When the association was formed the total dairy product of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin did not exceed $1,000,000 annually. In the year 1882 it is estimated that the cows of these states alone earned $90,000,000. But this is not the only gain. The negative value of dairy husbandry is as great as its positive. It prevents waste. It cries a halt to loose and slip-shod methods in the conduct of farming.

It turns the winter to profitable account as well as the summer. It becomes the saving clause in the scheme of agricultural salvation. Wherever dairy farming has become well established there can be seen a marked increase in general production. The farmer who makes grass culture the foundation is constantly strengthening his primary capital. Nothing will better help turn a grain farm into a grass farm than a herd of cows. Every hoof that he adds to his farm becomes a seeding machine. In the early history of the west it was found difficult to hold the grasses year after year. One principal reason for this was that there was no seed in the soil. But the introduction of dairying soon wrought a perceptible change and how in the dairy districts the upland pastures are the most productive of any. The deep interest which is being manifested in dairying by all classes of the community is the surest test of its abiding value. Butter and cheese factories are dotting our prairies like school houses, where whole communities daily go to school.

After the appointment of committees, addresses were again in order.

Is the Gathered Cream System a success was discussed in a paper by H. B. Curles, DeKalb, Ill. He said: The time has come when we must make choice goods to make any money. Choice creamery butter is now worth 37½ cents at Elgin, and fair to good dairy butter is worth 18 to 25 cents, a difference of 15 cents per pound, a margin which in most cases covers all the profits to the farmer. It costs less to gather the cream and manufacture the butter in the factory than on the farm. With the gathered cream system the skim-milk is left on the farm for the calves and pigs. Skim-milk is often the turning point between profit and loss on a lot of pigs.

Hon. Thomas Sampson, of Storm Lake, Iowa, considered the subject of creameries on the frontier. In the course of his remarks he said Why do we need creameries on the frontier? We need creameries for the reason that they bring with them high types of human character. They bring in their wake improved breeds of cattle. They bring wealth and comfort in their train. They make the farmer independent of railway wars and consolidations.

The call of cows was the subject of a short and pointed address by S. Faville, of Delavan, Wis. The speaker enumerated the many ways in which the life of cows may be made pleasant and comfortable. Give them enough to keep them warm and treat them politely. Always treat your cows as gently and politely as you would a lady. First, feed regularly. Second, feed industriously. Third, feed generously. For the coarse part of the feed, I should recommend early cut hay or corn fodder. Both of these cut in season and properly cured are excellent. With these I would feed liberally corn meal, ground oats and wheat bran in equal parts by weight; and always feed dry unless you have facilities for cutting up your hay or cornstalks; if so, mix and feed together.

In general give the cows all they can eat. Don't keep more cows than you can keep well. One word to those who are thinking of substituting the cow for the plow: I say count the cost before you begin. Remember that the dairy demands constant attention. It is morning and night, 365 days in the year.

At the evening session a musical and literary programme was presented, in which Jules Lumbard, the Mankato band, the Mankota chorus and others participated. H. E. Hoard of Montevideo presented a paper on Wanted, a Country Editor; Robert McAdams of Algonquin, Ill., on the Care of Cows, Handling of Milk and manufacturing of Butter, and Col. T. D. Curly of Syracuse, N. Y., on Dairying on the Frontier.

On Thursday, the second day's session of the Dairymen's association opened with a great increase of numbers. The hall was packed to its utmost limit. There were at least 600 delegates and others in attendance.

C. E. Marvin of Rochester, Minn., read a paper on the profits of diversified farming in the Northwest. He said it It is a real calamity to a country to be known or advertised, as especially adapted to the cultivation of any one kind of produce. No other section has suffered more from this evil than the Northwest, particularly Southern Minnesota. The farmers plowed and planted, fully expecting that the increase would follow without any further personal effort. Idleness breeds ignorance, misery, want and woe. With the majority of wheat farmers fully half the time is spent in idleness around the towns. Their homes fail to show that constant care usually bestowed on the home of the diversified farmer.

Mr. J. H. Broomell of Illinois, read a paper on the process of butter making. It was full of valuable information on the subject.

Churning and working butter was treated in a short essay by D. W. Curtis of Fort Atkinson, Wis.

A pleasant diversion after the long addresses was the arrival of Gov. Hubbard and J. H. Baker. The gubernatorial party escorted to the hall to strains of martial music. The audience were disappointed to find that Senator Sabin was not of the party. Gov. Hubbard being introduced, made some felicitous remarks and also Gen. Baker. President Hoard responded at the the afternoon session.

Practical refrigeration and transportation was the subject of a paper by Jules Lumbard of Chicago, the idea as to refrigerators being that the ice should be placed at the top of the room. As to transportation he said: "The railroad is the arm of the agricultural body. If the arm thrive the body will be strong. If the arm wither or be crippled, the body suffers and immediately dies. Each is dependent on the other, and their prosperity or decay, in the nature of things, must be mutual and interchangeable.

Farming on the Frontier was the subject of an exhaustive paper by Col. T. D. Curtis, of Syracuse, N. Y. This gentleman stands at the head of the dairying interest in the United States. The address was very long and full of points in regard to the good milking breeds of cows. He did not believe that a cow giving less than 3,000 pounds of good milk a year will prove a paying cow in Minnesota. The question always comes up, what breed of cows is best? There is a wide difference in breeds, and a wide difference in the individuals of the same breed. There is no one breed that can boast of all good cows. There are poor cows and good cows in all breeds. You must judge and select with care the individual, from whatever breed you may choose.

The Friesians, misnamed Holsteins and the Devons he considered the most promising for dairy purposes in the section—the first for milk and cheese and the latter for butter. Next to these he would commend the Ayrshires.

The address of Col. Curtis was in some respects the most valuable of any delivered and farmers will do well to procure the report which will contain it.

The secretary submitted the report of the committee on ways and means, recommending that the legislature of Minnesota be petitioned to appropriate $500 to aid in printing a sufficient number of the reports to supply the probable increased demand for the same from other states; that J. C. Noe be appointed a committee of one to solicit aid from all parties interested in procuring and circulating copies of the report; that $100 be appropriated to compensate President W. D. Hoard, and $150 to Secretary McGlinsey, for services the past year; that the prices fixed upon the report be for single copies, 30 cents; for four copies or more, 25 cents each.

Gen. S. H. Baker, railroad commissioner of Minnesota delivered a very long address in the evening, on the pleasure and benefit of dairy farming. Here is one passage:

A few years ago, as you rode over the undulating prairies of the great northwest, three acres out of four, if not more, of cultivated land seemed to be devoted solely to the raising of wheat. Stock was limited to the working animals, and I knew of many farmers who bought most of their own butter. No fine herds, no blooming fields of clover saluted the eye. The crops grew beautifully; our farmers drifted toward bankruptcy. Machinery and mortgages band in hand covered the land. But a new period came, a blooming clover field peeped into life here and there. A bull of royal pedigree would come into the neighborhood the fields of tasseled corn began to move; the country fairs grew in interest and noble sires and beautiful dams were seen in the prize lists. Philosophy and good sense brought fields of timothy, creameries and private dairies we have been obliged to use the elements and forces put into our hands. It has brought contentment and prosperity. We have found that he who applies industry, care, method and study, will find one of the safest, surest, most honored and elegant pursuits in all the range of agricultural life.

At the close of Gen. Baker's address the audience were treated to a solo, "The Crows are in the Corn," by Miss Hutchinson, of the memorial school, who sung as an encore, "Way Down Upon the Swanee River."

Gov. Hubbard made a few remarks, and was followed by Col. Little, who made a most humorous and telling speech.

On Friday the committee appointed to examine dairy utensils on exhibition made the following report:

We find two churns, the Boss and the Rectangular, both of which are too well known to need any recommendation from us. We find two butter-workers, known as the Eureka and Lever. We are of the opinion that both will do good work, but are inclined to give the preference to the lever. We find a milk can for setting milk which is new to your committee, but we judge from appearances that it is entirely practicable. It is called the "Geanery can." We find a carrying can for gathering cream, which is thought by your committee to be a good can for the purposes intended. It is called the "center-fiting can." We find another gathering can, the Little Favorite, which is claimed by the manufacturers to be an improvement in the constructions of the float, which your committee think is entitled to consideration. We find the Cooley creamer, which is too well known to need any remark. We find a milk pail, which is designed to keep dirt from the pail, but cannot recommend it. We also find some ash tubs manufactured by Woodard of Mankato, and very neatly made. We find Jenks' Automatic cheese-maker. Your committee, judging simply from the model, pronounce it a very practicable machine, Respectfully submitted.

The committee on nomination reported the following officers of the coming year:

President—W. D. Hoard, Ft. Atkinson, Wis.

Secretary—R. P. McGlincy, Elgin, Ill.

Treasurer—E. J. Gatman: Elgin, Ill.

The following resolution, introduced by Mr. Coffin, was carried.

Resolved, that this convention of dairymen, representing the dairy and cattle interests of the four great states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa, esteem it of the most vital interest to the vast cattle industry of this nation that congress should, without delay, enact at once effective and stringent laws, and make ample appropriation out of our overflowing national treasury to stamp out at once and forever every vestige of imported contagious pneumonia, and by strict quarantine law make it impossible for it to gain lodgment upon our shores.

After customary resolutions of thanks the convention adjourned sine die.

Imitation Baking Powders.

TO THE PUBLIC:

The public is cautioned against the practice of many grocers who sell what they claim to be Royal Baking Powder, loose or in bulk, without label or trade-mark. All such powders are base imitations. Analysis of hundreds of samples of baking powders sold in bulk, to parties asking for Royal have shown them all to be largely adulterated, mostly with alum, dangerous for use in food, and comparatively valueless for leavening purposes.

The public is too well aware of the injurious effect of alum upon the system, to need further caution against the use of any baking powders known to be made from this drug; but the dealer's assurance, "Oh, it's just as good as Royal, only we buy it by the barrel to save expense of can," etc., is apt to mislead the unsuspecting consumers into buying an article which they would not knowingly use in their food under any consideration. The only safety from such practices is in buying baking powder only in the original package, of a well-known brand, and a thoroughly established reputation.

The Royal Baking Powder is sold only in cans, securely closed with the Company's trade mark label, and the weight of package stamped on each cover. It is never sold in bulk, by the barrel, or loose by weight or measure, and all such offered the public under any pretense, are imitations.

If customers will bear these facts in mind, and also see that the package purchased is properly labeled, and the label unbroken, they will be always sure of using a baking powder perfectly pure and wholesome, and of the highest test strength in the market.

J. C. HOAGLAND, President,
Royal Baking Powder Co., N. Y.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Tuesday, February 13.

Senator Houlton's amendment to the bill changing the age necessary for pupils attending public schools from five to six, provides that children younger than six may attend if the unanimous consent of the school board is secured, and was adopted.

The Knox bill, fixing salaries of county auditors and treasurers next came up for consideration, and progress was reported.

An amendment increasing the compensation for clerk hire, when valuation is between $4,000,000 and $6,000,000, from $1,000 to $1,500 was introduced by Senator Bilson and adopted.

A deep interest is felt in the legislature on the question of law as affecting changes of county seats; and the bill presented by the senate committee on towns and counties, providing for a petition of a majority of legal voters and submission to the people, upon coming up in committee of the whole was a good deal discussed, and the senators, feeling that they were not ready to give the bill an absolute recommendation, reported progress.

The following are among the Senate bills passed: Providing for the purchase of sixty volumes of the general statutes of 1878 with supplements.

Joint resolution to congress for action relative to indemnity and other grants of lands to railways.

Admitting attorneys to practice in Minnesota upon certificates from supreme courts of other states and territories.

Providing for redemption of mutilated, lost or destroyed bonds, orders or warrants.

Prescribing method of consolidation of counties by a vote of two-fifths of all legal voters.

Providing for sale or mortgage by guardians of wards' real estate to pay debts.

House, Tuesday, February 13.

A vast number of bills were introduced and the following were passed:

The Knox bill, providing for checks on county auditors and treasurers, was recommended for indefinite postponement. This recommendation does not necessarily kill the bill, as it will again come before a committee in which more members are sitting. The cognate bill, fixing the salary of treasurers and auditors, also received a postponement recommendation. This bill hinges upon the other.

The following bills passed: Regarding actions concerning real property and providing for actual judgment in case of injectment instead of a mere award of damages for improvements made.

The bill introduced by Mr. Hicks, proposing an amendment to the constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, was the special order in the house, and the annoucement of the fact packed the gallery and crowded the floor, principally with ladies who were friends of the measure.

Speaker Fletcher, according to the rules, remained in the chair, and, after the bill had been read, Mr. J. E. Child moved that the committee report in favor of the passage of the bill, and proceeded to speak in support of the motion. He was followed by Gordon E. Cole and others in opposition. On motion of James Smith Jr. the bill was indefinitely postponed, by a vote of 49 to 38 as follows:

This bill was finally recommended for passage and imposing a fine of $2 a day for a man's failing to work out his tax, and of $1.50 a day for failing to bring his plow if ordered to do so.

The Plummer bill, making the rape of a girl under ten years old punishable by death, was recommended for passage in the house without a murmur of protest.

Senate, Monday, February 19.

The most important bill introduced was from the railroad committee. The bill as presented is taken from the Iowa railroad law modified in several points to suit the requirements of this state. It will be noted that nearly all questions of difference between shippers or passengers and the railway companies are left to the commission for adjustment, and at the same time the aggrieved party may find legal relief in the courts. As it takes the place of all other bills, and will probably become a law a synopsis is given:

Sec. 1. Provides that the governor, with the consent of the senate, shall, before April 1, next, after the passage of the act, appoint three competent electors, one of whom shall be skilled in railroad management, who shall constitute the board of railway commissioners, and who shall hold their offices for one, two and three years. The long and short terms of the first board shall be designated by the governor, who shall annually appoint a commissioner to fill the place then vacated. No person financially interested in any railway corporation shall be eligible for the office. It is also provides that if either of the commissioners shall resign the vacancy shall be filled by the governor, with the approval of the legislature: also, that any of the commissioners may be removed by the legislature.

Sec. 2. Provides that the board shall select one of its number as chairman. The board shall inquire into any neglect or violation of laws by any railway corporation, and inspect the condition of the roads, their equipment, management and conduct. They shall make a semi-annual examination of the bridges of the roads, and in case a bridge is deemed unsafe the company shall repair it within ten days or be prohibited from continuing business over the bridge. The commissioners shall notify companies of any changes needed in the equipment of the road or rolling stock. Nothing in this section shall relieve the railway companies of their liability for damages to persons or property.

Sec. 3. Provides that the board shall make a full report of the conditions of all railroads in the State to the governor for the legislature, on or before Jan. 1, each year. This report shall give a full showing of the entire standing of the roads, their capital, bonds, land sales, officers, and other matters of information up to June 30 preceding. The companies are required to furnish all information desired by the board by Sept. 16, under a penalty of $100 for each day of failure thereafter.

Sec. 4. Fixes the salary of the commissioners at $3,000 each, and their clerk $1,500. Their office shall be in the capitol building, fitted up at the expense of the State.

Sec. 5. Provides that the board and secretary shall take an oath of office.

Sec. 6. Empowers the board to examine all books and accounts of any railway corporation or the officers thereof on oath; their subpœna to be equally powerful as one issued by the district courts. The penalty for obstructing the commissioners in the performance of their duties is fixed at not more than $1,000.

Sec. 7. Makes it the duty of a railway corporation to furnish freight cars and keep necessary help to handle freight at its depots. It shall receive and transport freight in like manner for a reasonable compensation; the empty or loaded cars furnished by any connecting road to be delivered at any station or stations on the line of its road, to be loaded or discharged or reloaded and returned to the road so connecting; and for compensation therefor it shall not demand or receive any greater sum than is accepted by it from any other connecting railroad for like service.

Sec. 8. Settles the point of discrimination by stating that no railroad corporation shall charge, demand or receive from any person, company or corporation, for the transportation of personal property, or for any other service, a greater sum than it shall charge or receive from any other person, etc., for a like service from the same place or upon like condition and under similar circumstances, and all concessions of rates, drawbacks and contracts for special rates shall be open to and allowed all persons, companies and corporations alike at the same rate per ton per mile by the car load, upon like conditions, and under similar circumstances and during the same period of time. No railway corporation shall charge unreasonable rates.

Sec. 9. Provides that, in case of a violation of this act in discriminating or overcharging, the company so doing shall, on conviction, forfeit three times the amount of the damages, with the cost of the suit. It shall be the duty of the board to investigate complaints of this nature, and attempt to effect a settlement of differences, or in failure thereof, to report the case to the legislature. This does not bar the aggrieved party from suing.

Sec. 10. Requires the board to investigate all accidents on railroads, their report of the same not constituting evidence in the courts.

Sec. 11. States that, in case of differences between railway corporations and towns or cities through which they run on account of conduct, rates of speed, etc., a petition may be presented by the mayor of the town or president or managing officer of the road, and they shall be notified by the board of the place and time set for hearing and adjusting the differences. The action of the board, after thorough examination, shall be final.

Sec. 12. Defines the term "railroad."

Sec. 13. Provides that nothing in the act shall estop or hinder any person from bringing any suit against railway corporations.

Sec. 14. Abolishes the office of railroad commissioner and the act and amendment that created the office.

Senator Sargent also introduces a railroad bill, defining the rights of shippers, &c.

The bill appropriating $30,000 a year for ten years to the state prison for shop and other improvements met with strong opposition in committee of the whole but finally passed with an amendment which read "provided that no part of the money so appropriated shall be used in the purchase of machinery.

House, Monday, February 19.

Upon motion of Mr. J. E. Child, the joint resolution offered by him on the 15th, prohibiting the introduction of any bill except by unanimous consent, was taken from the table and adopted—yeas 27, nays 25.

Mr. Hill introduced a bill which is a duplicate of the bill destroyed when the capitol was burned, and which proposes to transfer the ordering of books under the text book act out of the hands of the auditor and transferring it to the superintendent of public instruction. It proposes to create depositories for the sale of the books in lieu of the school district clerks who now receive them.

A large number of bridge and other local bills were passed.

TERRIBLE MINING CASUALITY.

Seventy-Five Lives Lost by the Flooding of a Mine.

At the Diamond coal-mine near Joliet, Ill. on Friday a large body of earth, loosened by the frost and saturated with water, unable to withstand the pressure, caved in upon the workmen in the mine. The body of earth falling is about 90 feet square. 300 were in the various shafts when the ground sagged in under weight of water that had at once saturated and loosened it. Sixty-two were in one shaft, which caught the bulk of falling debris, and which was instantly flooded. Every one of them was either drowned or smothered inside of five minutes. Their bodies were buried beneath many tons of earth.

Later reports say that the dead number seventy-five. The miners having become used to these breaks did not think there was much danger when the water commenced breaking through, at 11 o'clock, most of them refusing to leave the mine, thinking there was no danger of the mine flooding; but in a few moments the break widened to a chasm twenty feet wide by sixty feet long.

Fifty men had left families. Almost one-half of the workings of the mine were abandoned and there being a slight inclination towards the bottom of the main shaft the water rushed directly toward it and so stopped the means of escape first and then penetrated to every part where the men were cutting coal. The men who escaped were fortunate enough to be near the only air shaft in the part of the mine that was being worked, and, perhaps, more might have escaped by that way but the water must have rushed straight to the main shaft and been overwhelmed on their way, while others, who thought to get to the shaft by a circuitous route had a still poorer chance of escape.

Several instances are reported in which the workmen were warned that the water was approaching, but they seemed to have been forgetful of the vast sheet of water which stretched over the surface of the mine, and to have paid little attention to the warning. The tide met them before more than twenty had reached the principal exit. The rushing water descending like an Alpine torrent, struck many of the unfortunate victims, whirling them away from the shaft. The scenes among the homes of the miners were distressing in the intensity of the sorrow that hung over the little community. There was scarcely a cottage in which some one was not missing.

A gentleman writes: "Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla cured me of a severe case of the piles, impure blood and general ill-health."

Another gentleman writes: "Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla cured me of nervous debility, palpitation of the heart, dizziness, night sweats, sleeplessness, etc. etc."

Mr. Bastian, of New Ulm, was killed at the Red Stone railroad bridge on Monday, Feb. 5. He was at work under the bridge, and a sledge hammer fell down striking him on the head.

George Stiles, foreman of Smith's tow mill, at Fulda, caught his hand in gearing Saturday, and lost two fingers and part of his right hand.

County News.

East Grand Forks Facts.

From the Courier.

East Grand Forks now has three first-class hardware stores. This is none too many to supply the trade during the coming season.

They had a small fire in Grand Forks yesterday. It occurred at the school house, but was extinguished before much damage was done.

The spring boom has already begun to manifest itself. Strangers are dropping in already and it will only be a very few weeks till the rush commences.

Peter Regan, who lives on the Point, south of East Grand Forks, was arrested Tuesday, by Deputy Sheriff Dwyer on a warrant sworn out by Joe Friedsam for stealing wood from his (Friedsam's) land, and was brought before Justice Patterson, and upon hearing Regan was discharged.

Hon. C. W. Nash of Valley City, brother of W. C. Nash and father of C. O. Nash, is at present in our midst, and has expressed himself as highly pleased with our little city and has almost made up his mind to locate here, and would undoubtedly do so but for his large business interests at other points.

The Crookston Chamber of Commerce passed a series of resolutions requesting Congress to open up the Red Lake Pineries The junior editor of the Courier read them before the Chamber of Commerce at this place Wednesday night and moved that the resolutions be indorsed, but Dr. Duggan politely squelched the motion by having it laid on the table.

Last Wednesday a rather amusing incident happened to one of our rural friends While crossing the bridge at the point with a heavy load of grain his sleigh took to sliding from one side of the bridge to the other and finally fell off onto the ice, some six feet below, the reach breaking in time to save the horses. For about ten minutes that former made himself heard, for he was m-a-d!

A gentleman was in town on Wednesday trying to interest our citizens in a roller mill. He stated that he was ready and willing to invest $2,000 himself, and if a sufficient amount of capital can be raised the project will be carried out The gentleman referred to has had thirty-five years experience as a miller, and says he knows of no better location for a flouring mill than right here in East Grand Forks. We await developments.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

The Rev. A. C. Anderson, has rented the house formerly owned by Mr. Dow, who has removed to Grand Forks.

S. M. Webster, brother of U. S. Webster of this place died at his home in Argyle, on Sunday last, after a long illness.

A trotting race between two of the horses belonging respectively to Ole Olson and Elias Steenerson, is to take place on Saturday next, the 24 inst. Stakes $50. "Get there Eli."

John Straus, in the employ of Fontaine & Anglim, dealers in agricultural implements, at Crookston, has been in town this week laying for some of our delinquent farmers.

Mr. L. E. Crane, traveling correspondent for the Minnesota Farmer, published at Minneapolis, was in town this week writting up the place, he is also drawing a plat of the town, which will be published in that Journal, as soon as ready.

Mr. C. L. Brainerd, County Surveyor came down from Red Lake Falls, this week. He reports everything booming up there, and says he has been initiated in to the printing business, as he has been getting out the paper of that place, the proprietor being sick with pneumonia at his old home in Perham.

News from Abroad.

IN CAMP, DAY WOOD, Wis., Feb. 16, '83.

ED. POLK COUNTY JOURNAL:—Please accept my thanks for copies of JOURNAL which are received regularly and promptly. The boys in camp have all caught the Red River Valley fever from the JOURNAL and I expect a regular stampede from here in the spring. You report cold weather but let me whisper it gently in your ear "you don't know anything about cold weather." We have had steady cold weather for two months, the mercury has frozen many times: on Jan. 20th it was 53° below, and on the 21st and 22d 48°. Now dont talk any more about "cold weather" in the Red River Valley. Snow is three feet on the level and lumbering brisk. More men are employed than ever before. Give my regards to all old friends and expect me up there about the first of April with a large crew of eager land hunter.

Yours truly THOR HAATVEDT.

The Roy-Beaudry Investigation.

Marshall County Banner: The examination of Camile Roy, charged with murdering Amedee Beaudry, was concluded Thursday evening. Roy was committed to jail to await the action of our next Grand Jury. Council for Mrs Beaudry waved examination, and she was also committed The evidence taken was all circumstantial and of a very flimsy character, but in the opinion of the court, sufficient to warrant their commitment.

COMBINATION BUGGY GEAR. WITH LONGITUDINAL SPRINGS.

The Combination Buggy, (cash price at factory, $100,) of which the above cut represents the Gear, has become known as the very best for easy riding and durable qualities. Years of most trying use, in private and in livery, has abundantly proved this fact. These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the torsional strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds to the elasticity of the springs producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—steel tires and axles, trimmings of never-fading cloth or fancy leather.

NEWSPAPER DUNS.

Here is how a brother journalist puts it: We suppose that many people think that newspaper men are persistent duns; let a farmer place himself in a similar business position and see if he would not do the same Suppose that he raised one thousand bushels of wheat and his neighbors should come and buy a bushel, and the price was a small matter of only two dollars or less, and the neighbor says, "I will pay the amount in a few days." As the farmer did not want to be small about the matter, he says all right, and the man leaves with the wheat. Another comes the same way until the whole of the one thousand bushels of wheat are trusted out to one thousand different persons, and not one of the purchasers concerns himself about it, for it is a small amount that he owes the farmer, and of course that would not help any. He does not realize that the farmer has fritted away his large crop of wheat and that its value is due him in a thousand little driblets, and that he is seriously embarrassed in his business because his debtors treat it as a little matter. But if they would all pay him promptly, which they could do as well as not, it would be a very large amount to the farmer and enable him to carry on his business without difficulty. The above comparison is too true of the difficulties that a newspaper man has to contend with.

Col. P. Donan.

Col. Donan came in yesterday on the Larimore train, and dined at the Selkirk. His trip to the Devil's Lake was made in 62 hours, during which time the driver of his conveyance lost his road in the vicinity of Bartlett and caused a delay of two hours. He reports everything in a flourishing condition at Devil's Lake City, and was astonished at the rapid settlement of the country. The tide of immigration continues to pour with an unabated torrent. On his return, he met twenty-five teams drawing loads of furniture, lumber, merchandise, etc., and nearly all with families. He deprecates over-booming Dakota and exciting any expectations that never can be realized; Dakota, he says, needs but the naked truth, and that alone will fill the country with a happy, prosperous population. He visits Dayton, not for the purpose of regaling himself at the banquet, but for the opportunity he will have of speaking to the class of citizens whom he desires to reach. His work there he expects to bear good fruit for the interests of North Dakota.—[Grand Forks Herald, 16th.

PENSION FRAUDS.

INFAMOUS BUSINESS.

American Agriculturist.

It is a most infamous business throughout! The rapacity of some agents is paralleled only by the vultures that fatten on the corpses of the dead, in the war time. Some claim agents are the legitimate successors of these hideous birds of prey, and feed upon the wretched remnants of the patriotic host whose lives the more kindly bullets spared. The stake these men play for is a high one. With nearly 300,000 applicants upon file, and as many more in sight or to be hunted up, the advance fees run up to more than a million dollars, and with nearly 300,000 claims already allowed, for each of which the fee is $10, another $3,000,000 will have gone into their pockets. To these sums may be added in blood money in petty fees, in postage and in other expenses; the heart-breaking delays; the interminable waiting; the pitiful sufferings of those who have submitted to these extortions, and all the sorrow and agony that attended upon this bitter hopping against hope.

$116,000,000 VOTED FOR PENSIONS IN 1882, AGAINST 60,000,000 IN 1881.

If these thing are possible when the pension roll was not above $60,000,000 what will be the possibilities of wrong, when avaricious agents come to parcel out the $116,000,000 that Congress has voted for the coming year? No wonder the camp of the myrmidons is alive with bustle and activity, and that the foul birds gather with obscene cries to the rich spoils that lies before them.

Immediately after the war, as was natural, the applicants for pensions were numerous. In five or six years most of those who were entitled to pensions had procured them, and year after the issue of pension papers was on a diminishing scale. Then began a revival of interest until now the applications pour in at the rate of thousands per month. This has been going on for years, and yearly the tied grows higher and stronger. The motive power behind it is the demagogical action of Congress in the passage of laws which stimulated into unhealthy activity that passion to "live off the Government" which is so prevalent and predominant. All this was taken advantage of by dishonest and corrupt agents, who found an abundance of material to work up The repeal of the law limiting the period during which claims could be filed, and prepared the way for claims that were utterly unwaranted, and in many cases absolutely wicked. Sickness in 1880 or 1882 was charged to the account of exposure or wounds in the war, and made to do duty in the application for back pensions to the amount of thousands of dollars. An agent recently put in a claim for a pension for a needy widow in Ohio, on the ground that a daughter, who would have been her support, took cold and died while attending soldiers in hospital during the war. A case that came under our own observation illustrates the character of the men engaged in this business. A gallant soldier of the war lived sixteen years after his discharge without thought of a pension. He then suffered from a sun stroke from which he died a year later. His case did not escape the notice of the pension hounds, who were after the scent in full cry, with the false plea that a justifiable claim could be made on the ground that his sunstroke supervened upon exposures during the war! This was as clear a case of a fraudulent claim as could be manufactured, and it is but one of many thousands. It is time that this business should be stopped, and that fraudulent agents and fraudulent applicants should be so fully exposed and so severely excoriated, that none will dare to venture to carry out schemes which are neither more nor less than systematized robbery of the Treasury.

OPENED THE SLUICEWAYS OF DEMORALIZATION,

WILL WHEAT CONTINUE A PAYING CROP?

Orange Judd writes as follows in the American Agriculturist for March: There is a cheerful side to this question. Comparing a present railway map of this country with one five years ago, we see a large increase in the black lines, extending continuously from the Atlantic to the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers and beyond. Consolidations and filling-in links are adding to these trunk lines every year, and every fresh added line is of special interest to all Western farmers. Competition, great improvements in locomotives, freight cars, steel rails, etc., are rapidly reducing the cost of transportation, and wheat, flour, corn, and other grains, salted and dried meats, butter, cheese, etc. are carried almost as cheaply from the Mississippi to the Atlantic ports now as they were from Western New York, Ohio, and Michigan only a few years ago. These cheaper railway rates are already raising the question whether it will be worth while to enlarge or even maintain the great canal rautes. New York has abolished tolls on the main water arteries, and it is even feared that with canal tolls free, the railways can still compete with any warer transportation.

Can Europe absorb our surplus at paying rates? There is no more well established fact than that consumption is largely increased by every small decline in prices. At present, in London, while wheat is worth $1.30 to $1.40 per bushel—say $1.35—and at this price there is a greatly enarged demand for consumption The regular railway freight from Chicago to New York is now about 18 cents per bushel. Sea freight, New York to London, about 14 cents, or from Chicago to London, 32 cents per bushel. Add 3 cents for handling, insurance, etc., and $1.35 in London corresponds to about $1.00 per bushel in Chicago, and about 85 cents in Central Kansas, points on the Missouri River, and at a considerable distance northwest of St. Paul. But both railroad and ocean freights are often much lower, which has the effect of increasing the price of grain here, or of reducing the price abroad, and thus increasing the consumption; or partly both of these effects.

The point of the above is, that when wheat can be obtained in Chicago at 80 to 85 cents per bushel, it can be laid down in Europe at prices that will immensely increase consumption, and defy competition from Southeastern Europe, India, Australia, ets. In the principal wheat regions, of the West, the estimated cost of growing wheat, and delivering it to near railway stations, is 40 to 45 cents per bushel. At points not too distant to allow it to be freighted to Chicago for 15 to 25 cents per bushel, it will long continue a paying crop, at least until the annual production shall have doubled or quadrupled, and even then we believe Europe will be a ready customer for all we shall have to spare, without reducing prices here below remunerative rates.

PURE BRED, THOROUGHBRED, AND FULL BLOOD IN STOCK RAISING.

The three principal designations of stock are: 1, pure bred; 2, thoroughbred; and 3, full blood.

1. A pure bred animal is one descended from a pure or original race without intermixture of other blood. The Devons are a pure race of cattle. The wild cattle of Chillingham may be called a pure race. The buffalo is a pure race. The true Arabian horse is a pure race. Wild animals are pure races.

2. A thoroughbred is an animal originally of mixed lineage, but which has been interbred so long without recourse to foreign sources that the progeny comes true, or nearly true, to the type established. The Shorthorns and Herefords among cattle and the races among horses arising from a mixed lineage are thoroughbreds. That they have not yet ceased the endeavor to improve these breeds, through the careful selection of sires and dams, always careful within the line the oldest and well defined blood of the varieties form which they originally spring, is proof that breeders do not believe that their ultimate excellence has been reached.

3. The term full blood indicates neither purity of blood nor thorough breeding, except relatively. An animal of the mommon blood of a country may be bred indefinitely to a pure blood, and yet never reach purity. The first cross would be one-half blood; the second cross, three-quarters blood; the third cross, seven-eighths blood; the fourth cross, fifteen-sixteenths; the fifth, thirty-three thirty-fourths of the pure or the thoroughbred blood, if none other has been used in the cross. Yet the resulting progeny would always contain a fraction of the original or pure blood. Yet often seven-eighths, and especially those fifteen-sixteenths bred, show the characteristics to so great a degree that none but experts can distinguish form outward observation between the full blood and the pure or thoroughbred type. Hence seven eighths or fifteen-sixteenths bred animals are by courtesy sometimes called full bloods.

A grade is an animal containing some pure or thoroughbred blood. A seven-eighths grade is sometimes called a high grade.—[Prairie Farmer.

Lady Tillers of the Soil.

Lisbon Star.

The Dakota fever is infectious, and a number of young ladies have become sadly afflicted with it. This affliction has been the means in some instances of placing the fair ones in independent circumstances, where otherwise they would be working in some menial capacity.

An instance known to our readers is that of a young widow who came to Lisbon, took a pre-emption claim of 160 acres, proved up and got a title to her land, and then took another claim under the homestead law of 160 acres more, on which she is now living, and as the possessor of 320 acres of the richest soil on God's footstool, she is of course considered worth having, and several bachelors in the vicinity are glaring at each other with fire in their eyes and hatred in their hearts towards their rivals.

In Lisbon there are not a few servant girls who have taken up claims, and intend to cultivate them by contract; probably any one of them could realize from $500 to $700 for their land. One young lady who is clerking in one of the stores in town, is the possessor of a number of town lots in addition to several quarter sections of land. The land is worth perhaps $25 per acre, but she came into possession of it by taking advantage of the pre-emption, homestead and tree-claim laws. Her town lots were bought when prices were low, from the proceeds of her salary, and have now advanced to nearly ten times the price she paid for them.

Another young lady who took up a pre-emption claim last fall, has the satisfaction of knowing that a railway survey has since been made across it, and it is not at all improbable that she may yet become the owner of a townsite worth from $50,000 to $100,000. It is a very poor townsite that is not worth the former sum, 250 lots at $200 each making that amount. A quarter section of land will make about 600 ordinary town lots, allowing for streets and avenues.

The incidents above described are indigenous to Ransom County, and every county in Dakota has a similar number of cases on record. If the thousands of hard working girls in the east could only be helped to emigrate to Dakota, they would find plenty of employment at high wages, besides having opportunities of taking up land that in a few months will make them small capitalists.

The American Agriculturist for March fully sustains the high character of the leading Journal of the farm and garden. Among the contributors are Dr. C. W. Barney (Director N. C. Exp. Station,) A Meal from Cotton Stalks; S. Sato (A Japanese,) Market Gardening in Japan; H. A. Haigh (of the Detroit Bar,) Who Inherits the Farm? C. P Dewey, The Carrier Pigeon, etc.; Dr. Geo. Thurber, Spring Work in the Garden, etc.; D. Z. Evans, Pear Culture; Jos. H. Reading (South Guinea,) Gardening in West Africa; Orange Judd, Wheat, Corn, Pork, Lard; W. W. Meech, Quince Culture; Daniel Currie, First Prize Sheep Barn; J. E. Scott, Setting out Plants; E. E. Rexford, Bag Holder; Dr. Bryon D. Halsted, Chemistry of Farm, and various short articles; P. H. Jacobs, Experiments in Poultry Keeping; L. D. Snook, Gravel Walks, etc.; Agnes Carr, What the March Winds Did. Among the large engravings are Early Spring Time (Frontispiece;) On the Toboggan Slides; Homing Bees in the South; Antwerp Carrier Pigeons; Evening Primrose; Garden Datura; Spring Adonis; Merino Ram; The Seal; Chinchilla; and Girl in the March Wind. Many labor-saving devices are illustrated in the Farm, Garden and Household Departments, while the Boys' and Girls' Columns are brim-full of interesting and instructive matter. The exposure of Pension Frauds and Sundry Humbugs is of great value to the hundreds of thousands who read the American Agriculturist from month to month. Published by the Orange Judd Co., 751 Broadway, N. Y. $1.50 per year; single number 15 cents.

D 1882, at 11:20 o'clock a m., in book "G" of Mortgages on pages 59 and 60, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON, THURSDAY, MARCH 1.

No. 1 wheat 93, No. 2 88.

Judge Reynolds is sojourning a few days at the State Capitol.

Mr. Chase and family have returned from their visit east.

Mrs. Fred Date, of Maple Lake is visiting friends in the city.

About 300 attended the masquerade ball at Ericsson's Hall last night.

The tunnel under the railroad at Third Street is nearly completed.

John Darco is a subject for congratulations. Boy, Feb. 20th. Mother and son doing well.

Mr. Geo. McLean has returned to the city and has accepted a situation with Brower & McLean.

Hon. B. Sampson left for St. Paul on Wednesday evening to attend the closing hours of the Legislature.

Dan McKinnon has rented Rohbecke's restaurant and intends to run a No. 1 hash factory.

We still sell groceries above cost.
[43-tf] SARGENT & LEWIS.

If you have a telephone you can holler at Benham & Underhill if you want to. They are ready to reply.

The Biggest time of the Season was the masquerade at Ericsson's Hall last night. So say those who took it in.

Mrs. T. J. West was in the city last week. She reports that Mr. West has been suffering from a severe cold but is getting better.

Advices from Maple Lake state that Dr. Cable has been very sick but that he is now convalescent with a bright prospect of a speedy recovery.

There will be an installation of officers of Crookston Lodge No. 25 Knights of Pythias on to-morrow evening at 8 p m. Members will please take notice.

Mr. D. C. Hallock, of Edna, was up on a business trip, while in the city called at the JOURNAL office and left one more name on our subscription book.

To a man up a tree it looks very much as though the bridge bill would die of strangulation. It has been so thoroughly amended that its originality is entirely destroyed.

Ed. Bivins, who has located a Tamarac River in the machine business, was smiling with his friends in this city this week. Ed has a bonanza up there and will work it for all it is worth.

The only remaining child of Mr. and Mrs Ole Bang is very sick of scarlet fever and its life has been despaired of. It is, however, said to be better to-day and faint hopes are felt for its recovery.

The JOURNAL is favored with a sample copy of J. C. Vaughan's Corn and Potato Manual, which little book is of great value to potato and corn growers. Every farmer can obtain a sample copy by sending his name and address to J. C. Vaughan, No. 42 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

The brakesmen, who were arrested by our sheriff a while since and turned over to the sheriff of Wilkin County, were, upon preliminary examination, discharged as no one appeared against them. They left the country but before they went they stole everything of value from a trunk belonging to baggageman, Ned Gallup, leaving him with only one suit of clothes. His loss is estimated at about $200.

The Supervisors of the town of Fairfax will meet at the office of the town clerk on Tuesday, March 6th, for the purpose of Auditing any bills against the town, and the transacting of such other business as may be brought before the board. There will also be a caucus at the above place and date, for the purpose of nominating town officers for the ensuing year.

Mayor Allen informs us that he has a kiln of brick ready for burning, and intends to fire up this week. He says that he will this spring add another new dry press, which will weigh three times as much as the old one, and one new sand moulding machine to his establishment. This will enable him to make two kinds of brick, one in dry and another in wet weather, and give the establishment a capacity of 30,000 bricks daily. He intends to sink a deep well.

The JOURNAL received a letter from Mr. H. B. Davis, of Grand Rapids, Mich. with request for extra copies. Mr. Davis seems to be doing good missionary work out there, as he says that he expects to start for Crookston about March 20th with 16 carloads of settlers who come prepared to make good homes in Polk County. Well, they are none too soon, for, while there yet remains considerable government land, it is being rapidly taken, and it will not be many years before it is all settled up.

Joe Roberton, the bonanza farmer of the Marais, dropped in to see us on Friday, and ever mindful of the needy printer, produced the wherewithal to set his subscription ahead one year. He informs us that he has rented his farm for the coming season. He has also rented his new store building to Ole Olson at Fisher who will fill it from cellar to eaves with a fine stock of general merchandise just as soon as it is completed. Joe did not say what he intends to do in the future but may decide to take a trip west for a time.

M. E. Church Lyceum.

At the meeting Tuesday evening a large and appreciative audience was present to hear the debate relating to woman suffrage. The decision was rendered in favor of the negative. Three new members united with the society. The following is the programme for the next meeting:

Music ....Mr. and Mrs. Boree.
Reading ....Miss Perry
Essay ....J. J. McLennan.
Music ....Choir.

County News.

Red Lake Falls' Doings.

From the Era.

Mrs. J. H. Sanders is quite ill with inflamatory rheumatism.

Peter Mercier's boy is only six months old, but he pulls the scales down at 30½ pounds.

Buse & Colbentson are getting quite a stock of logs at their saw mill on the Clearwater.

Next week the Era will appear under a new name, enlarged and improved. Look out for it.

Mrs. Kretzschmar met with an unfortunate accident Wednesday, badly spraining her ankle.

The telephone wires which were down for a few days between here and Crookston, are now in repair and the phone is working all right again.

Henry Knuffer has taken a partner in the hotel business, and the Headquarters hotel register will bear the names of Knuffer & Clark as proprietors in future.

Several of the "Lo" family, who have been cutting wood near town, have left for the agency, and there are consequently several tenements to let, but no applicants.

Work on the race has been delayed somewhat by the late storms and by delay in receipt of blasting powder. It is progressing well now, the excavated portion being about 250 feet long.

Clough's saw mill on Red Lake River just above the mill race, is now running in good shape. It will be completely enclosed in a day or two, when it will run on material for the mill race and dam.

County Commissioner Gervais and Mr. H. R. Nolan, a professional builder, have been examining the bridge across the Clearwater, and will immediately take the necessary steps to make the bridge secure.

The wife of Commissioner Gervais has been very ill for some time, but under the skillful and assiduous treatment of Dr. Lemeux is rapidly recovering, also Mr. Gervais' little daughter Martha, who will soon be out as usual.

Our young men sigh and groan for the sight of a "tonsorial artist." Their hirsute appendages require trimming and cutting to give them the proper style. The owner of a good barber pole, "with all the term implies," will find a bonanza slumbering here.

Fertile Facts.

Communicated.

The few fine days have caused our village to present quite a busy scene, consequently business is good and everybody happy.

Our school registers some 25 pupils, and all seem to be much engaged in study, in which they are ably seconded by their teacher, Mr. Townsend.

La Due & Co., are getting in their spring stock, as they do not intend to travel on such roads as their are in the spring near the railroad.

Remember the bids on our school house must be in by March 1st. We have the cash on hand to pay as we go. We build 18x28 12 foot posts with a belfry Our board have ordered seats etc., and a 400 lb. bell.

The mail is carried quite regularly now but the storm last Friday delayed it until Saturday.

Messrs. Kankle and La Due were in Crookston during the session of the county commissioners, on bridge business. They secured (by the aid of our county commissioner from this district Mr. K. Nelson) the appointment of a committee, to locate a county bridge at Fertile, on the old Pembina trail crossing of the Sand Hill, a much needed bridge, as large numbers of emigrants pass through here every year, and people from the south coming to mill must cross.

We are glad to hear of the settlement with Norman County.

Our townsite proprietor, Mr. Kankle, disposed of several lots while in Crookston and Red Lake Falls.

We were sorry to see, while in Crookston lately, on nearly every store "selling at cost," which, if followed to the letter, may mean fun for the buyer but death for the merchant.

La Due & Co. carry a full stock of hardware and stoves.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Burdick lost their youngest boy. They have our warmest sympathy.

We shall probably have a physician located here next spring.

Messrs Carlson & Kilen, our blacksmiths, appear to have their hands full of work, and are giving good satisfaction.

Machine agents are plenty, but do not meet with much success, as our people do not buy more machinery than they actually need.

We think the circulation of your excellent paper should and can be materially increased at this office.

Respect. yours, J.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Some of our gay and festive young people had a jolly time in F. C. Ashall's building on Saturday evening last. The light fantastic toe was tripped in a pretty lively manner for an hour or two.

The telephone line has been completed between Crookston and Red Lake Falls. St. Hilaire comes next on the list and we will be saying "hello" to our Crookston neighbors in a short time.

Mr. Thomas Libby has just ordered the material for the building of school. The building is to be erected on the R. R. Co's townsite, and will be 24x40, and two stories high.

Two young men from Fisher visited us last week and purchased lots on Crocker, Curdy & Nelson's addition upon which they intend erecting a building for the purpose of carrying on the merchant tailoring business. The name of the firm is Oleson & Jorstad and they will have their business in running order by the 1st of Bpril. The cry is still they come.

The success and progress of our town in the future will be mainly due to unity among our business men and boomers. "United we stand, divided we fall," is a maxim which will apply particularly to us. While our business men are expected to have their business conflicts, yet they should not be so indiscreet as to let these disturb their harmony in public affairs of interest and advantage to the progress of the town. Upon our business men we look for a large amount of the prosperity which we expect, but if they are always at loggerheads we need not expect much from them. Competition in trade is a good thing, but when it is carried into matters of public interest it becomes a nuisance.

Now, while other towns are grumbling and complaining of hard times and no business, our little burg booms right along and presents a lively and prosperous appearance. There are now two large buildings in course of erection and about a dozen more will be commenced within the next two weeks. Our inhabitants are not making much of a splorg, but believing in the maxim that "actions speak plainer than words," are putting their best foot forward to advance the interests of the place. New settlers have already commenced to come in and much of the available land in this vicinity is being rapidly taken up. The railroad is expected to arrive by the middle of March, and everything points towards the fact that St. Hilaire and this part of Polk County will have such such a boom in the spring as has never been heard of in the Red River Valley.

Beltrami Happenings.

Owing to the stormy weather we have been haying I have not been able to learn of all the happenings, but I will inform you of all I know.

A party of young people were storm stayed at Webb Murphy's during the last blizzard They pronounced it the most enjoyable event of the season.

The social party at R. E. Ward's Tuesday evening was well attended and pronounced an enjoyable affair. We all noticed that our friend Frank took a very active part.

The young people of this place all expected to attend the masquerade at Ada February 22d, but owing to the cuteness of a smart aleck who professes to be a great society man, they stayed at home and let him go alone.

Mrs Massy, the landlady, has been very sick but is now convalescent.

Walter Walker, of Warren, has been visiting his many friends at this place.

Esquire Budd, who has been spending the winter in this place will soon return to his home in Rolette. We are sorry to have him and his amiable wife leave us.

We are glad to see our town building up, but not with billiard tables and saloons, for here, as elsewhere, they are considered a curse. Through fate's kaleidescope I see that what has been again may be. So beware, young men, think what the consequences have been. Intemperance has wasted many a farm and scarred the finest brain. JIMMY.

We wish to state, farmers, that we shall keep on hand constantly a full line of flour and feed, meats, provisions etc., and a full line of staple and fancy groceries. Call and see us.

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.

Three Minutes to Twelve.

The Story of Winter Night—A Dream and What Came of It.

On a cold December night some twenty years ago, when the earth was bound in a black frost and the bitter wind blew strong and shrewdly, I was returning home from spending the evening at a friend's house, situated some three or four miles out of town. The sky was so black, the country lanes were so dark, that I was truly thankful when the scattered lights of an outlying suburb began to twinkle in the distance, and it was with a sigh of relief that I stopped under the first lamp-post I came to and looked at my watch. It was no easy task, for the lamp glass had a pane broken and the strong wind blew the gas in all directions and almost extinguished it.

I read the time at last—three minutes to 12—and, looking up from the watch-face, I started to see a man standing close opposite me, I had heard nothing of his approach. We looked at each other but for a moment, yet it was sufficient time to imprint his features indelibly on my memory. A tall, shabby man, in a threadbare, black frock-coat and a seedy tall hat, his face lantern-jawed and sallow, his eyes sunken and lusterless, his beard long and ill-trimmed. In a tone of elaborate civility he asked me the time, thanked me for my answer, and wishing me good night, passed into the blackness, which seemed to engulf him like a grave.

I turned for a moment to think of his lonely walk in that grim obscurity and resumed my homeward way, laughing at myself for the start he had given me and reflected that the strong wind had blown away the sound of his approach. I thought of him as I sat and smoked my pipe over my fire, and felt a comfortable shudder steal up on me as I imagined him facing the bitter blast in his insufficient clothing.

In the course of a week or two the incident—trifling enough, Heaven knows—faded from my memory, and I thought no more of it.

In those days I was actively engaged in the timber trade, and the course of my business took me a good deal about the country, and brought me largely in contact with the agents of the different noblemen and country gentlemen of the district. With one of these agents, who resided near the country town of L. I had numerous transactions, and I used often to run down to L. to meet him, for the town was only fifteen miles away, and was on a line of railroad. It was a dull little hole enough, that only warmed up into life when the militia or the assizes were on.

One night I returned from L., having just made a large purchase from my friend the agent, whose master, a sporting nobleman, was reduced to cut down the family timber.

When I fell asleep that night I had a very simple but vivid dream. I thought I was standing on a lofty hill. By my side stood a veiled figure, who, with a commanding gesture, motioned me toward the town of L., which lay in the far distance. Then I awoke.

Of course, I explained the thing to myself easily enough. I had been a good deal engaged in the neighborhood of the place, and had a large venture more or less remotely connected with it. Still the dream was so vivid that I could not dismiss it from my thoughts during the whole of the day, and when I went to bed at night I wondered if it would again visit me.

It did come again; precisely the same dream, in precisely the same manner. Once more I found a convincing explanation. Doubtless I had been thinking too much about the first dream, and this had given rise to the the second. But my explanation did not convince me in the least; again I was haunted by the thing throughout the day, and when I came home at night my preoccupation was so evident that it attracted my wife. She questioned me upon the cause, and, only too thankful to unbosom myself, of what was now almost a trouble I told her about the dream and its repetition. She had the tact not to laugh at me, but was evidently little impressed by the narrative.

The third night it came again, if anything, more vivid and startling than before. This time I was utterly unhinged, the pale face that fronted me in the looking-glass was hardly recognizable for my own. I went down to breakfast, filled with a foreboding of some misfortune—bad news in my letters—I knew not what.

The maid entered with the letter-bag.

"There," said my wife, passing me a letter on which was the L. post-mark. "That breaks your dream, John."

I opened it hurriedly. It was from the agent, requesting me to meet him at L. that day at 1 o'clock, to arrange a difficulty that had arisen in the performance of his contract.

I was intensely relieved. Here was an opportunity to go to L., and perhaps, the very fact of going would put me right. There were two fast trains to L. in the morning, but I decided to go by the first, regardless of the fact that I should have some hours to wait. So I found myself speeding away toward my destination.

The train was full. Pipes exhaled their fragrance, newspapers were turned and flattened and there was that leisurely kind of morning conversation that prevails among men going off by an early train to their day's work. I soon discovered that I had fallen among a party of barristers, and their chief topic was a peculiarly interesting case which was to be finished that day at the L. assizes.

"He must sum up against the prisoner," said a gentleman with a fat, florid face and long sandy whiskers, who wore a light overcoat and shepherd's-plaid trousers. "The defense was a complete failure, and deserved to be."

"It was certainly rather audacious," returned a clean-shaven young man with a double eye-glass, who sat opposite me. "But I don't like circumstantial evidence."

"All evidence is more or less circumstantial," answered he of the florid complexion: "and this is as clearly guilty to my mind as if there had been a dozen witnesses to stand by and see him do the deed. That's my opinion, Heywood," and the oracle disappeared behind his newspaper.

Feeling glad to discover any topic that would divert my thoughts from their gloomy forebodings, I addressed myself to Heywood, the young barrister, with whom I had a slight acquaintance.

"You seem much interested in this trial that is going on," I said. "May I ask if you are engaged upon it?"

"No," he answered. "But it is a curious case. A man, a clerk dismissed from his employment is accused of murdering the cashier of the firm. The evidence against him is entirely circumstantial; but the defense broke down at the most critical point and the case certainly looks very black for the prisoner."

The train was now slackening speed, and there was a general rising. I rose, too.

"Are you going to get out here?" said Mr. Heywood, opening the door, as we glided into the station.

"Have you come down so early on business?"

"Ye—s," I said, wishing to goodness I knew what the immediate business was. "Nothing very urgent, though," I added, half to myself, as I got out.

"If you have the time to spare, you had better turn in and hear the end of the trial," said Heywood. "The court will be crowded with ladies, no doubt, but I can smuggle you into a corner."

Not knowing what to do with myself for the next two hours, I accepted the offer with gratitude. I was soon seated in an obscure corner of a dingy, ill-lighted, ill-ventilated court-house, which, would have been ill-smelling too, had it not been for the scent wafted from the numerous ladies who were present. One of these, a buxom female obstruction who ought to have known better, was just in front of me, and blocked my view with an enormous bonnet. I could not see the prisoner or his counsel, or even the clock over his head, at which the people kept looking eagerly as the hour fixed for the recommencement of the trial approached.

At last there was a stir and bustle, caused by persons invisible to me, then a call for silence, and, after a few preliminaries, the summing-up commenced.

I listened the more intently because I could see nothing. The clear, cold, telling sentences cut deep in my consciousness. How distinct and convincing it all was! How all those minute facts the mute testimony of footmarks and the like, arranged and distributed by that powerful intellect, grouped themselves into the damning proof of guilt!

I cared nothing for the prisoner, had no interest in the trial, but my mind was wonderfully fascinated by this tale of horror. At length the weighty tones ceased, and a murmur of relief and expectation ran round the assembly. At this moment the woman with the high bonnet shifted her seat, and I obtained full view of the prisoner. I started involuntarily. Where had I seen that face before?"

The jury returned after a short absence; the verdict was guilty, accompanied with a recommendation to mercy. Again the judge's solemn tones sounded through the court, again they ceased.

There was a dead silence. I sprang to my feet as if impelled to do so by some unseen power, and looked steadily at the prisoner. His face was averted from me for the moment, but the looks of the people showed me that he was about to speak. Slowly he turned round, and, in a voice whose deep, earnest tones could be heard all over the assembly, he said:

"There lives but one man who can prove me innocent—and there he stands."

With white face and outstretched arm he pointed—at me. I gazed at him with a sudden flash of recognition: It was the man I had seen under the lamps. And by a strange coincidence, at this moment the court clock struck twelve.

The plea that had been got up by the defense was an alibi. But there was a space of some two hours that could not be accounted for, and the theory of the prosecution was that the crime had been committed during that time. My evidence supplied the missing link, for the place in which I had seen the man was so far distant from the scene of murder that it was impossible for him to have been anywhere near at its coincidence.

And the dream? Only a coincidence, you will say, perhaps, or a fit of indigestion, or my timber contract. Nevertheless, as I have told it to you, so it happened. Explain it away who can.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Monkeys Acting Human.

[Philadelphia Special to the Commercial Gazette.

Among the recent additions to the Zoological Garden were twenty-five monkeys from the East Indies. They were green monkeys, Rhoesus monkeys, spider monkeys, Lemures and Maccacus, and one of them, a large Rhoesus monkey, with a beautiful smooth, yellowish gray coat, soon won distinction for himself. All these animals were put in a big cage in the monkey house, when the big Rhoesus began jumping up and down in a kind of hysterical dance, which drew the keeper's attention at once. After he became a little accustomed to his surroundings, and began climbing about with the rest, his first exploit was to seize a bonnet monkey named "Frank," one of the oldest inhabitants, and hurl him bodily from the top of the cage to the floor. This was the signal for an uproar, which began immediately, and a big Maccacus, which is kept fastened by a long chain, because of his fierce disposition, started up the railings to chastise the aggressor. The new-comer met him half-way, and both dropped to the floor in close combat, while pretty much all the other monkeys in the cage jumped on top of them. For about ten minutes there was the livliest kind of a tussle in the cage, while the keepers could do nothing but look on in dismay. Finally the Rhoesus whipped the crowd, and from that moment he has been known as "Sullivan." He and a big female Macacus are now the "bosses" of the cage, which contains about sixty monkeys, and they apportion out the public patronage to suit themselves. There were evidences of another battle royal when the keepers opened the house yesterday morning, and a little monkey was nursing a limb that had been bitten almost off; but, as a general thing, the cage contains a peaceable and apparently happy family.

Exquisite Embroidery.

"I happen to know that W. H. Belden paid one bill for embroideries for the decoration of his palatial residence, at Sixty-second street and Fifth avenue, which amounted to $30,000," a lady, who unquestionably has enjoyed opportunities of knowing about expensive embroideries, said. "In the parlor, there are four very large double portieres and one single each with its valuable sea-blue plush richly adorned with Beauvais embroidery. Each of these grand double portieres, with its vallance, is worth $600. The portieres in the reception room are just like those in the parlor, except that there the plush is sea-green. All the furniture is richly embroidered to match with the portieres, except the three huge pillows on the sofa, each of which bears the Belden coat arms, very large, gorgeously embroidered in gold, silver and crimson. When I spoke of these portieres as worth $600, you understand I do not say that is what they cost. In fact, I am informed that their price was very much above that figure."—New York Sun.

THROUGH GEORGIA.

An Ex-Confederate's Talks With General Johnston and General Sherman.

From Our Day.

"It is a singular coincidence that I had the pleasure of General J. E. Johnston's company, on his first trip after the war by daylight over the Western and Atlantic Railroad, North Georgia, and subsequently of General Sherman's over the same road. Although fifteen years had elapsed, General Johnston pointed out the locations of different commands under him, and appeared to remember the exact situation of hills, valleys, and ravines as vividly as if he had been raised among them. These places were all commented upon as a fast train sped over bridges and around the scores of hills by its crooked line, whereas his former points of observation were more from the wagon roads. Not long since I had a chat with his engineer, Lieutenant Buchanan, to whom he refers in his book as that "very intelligent officer." He told me how anxious he sometimes was when quick movement were necessary, and the commanding officer would take his opinion simply of distances, etc., and so move the army.

General Sherman did not recall the territory so clearly, but he illustrated the care for his men by pointing out the place, at Chickamauga Station, where a negro man, stopping to look at the soldiers pass, removed an axe from his shoulder and rested it on a gun which lay in the mud, and that it caused the gun to fire, wounding two of his men. At Graysville he pointed to an old stone mill building, saying an Englishman made sabers for the Confederates there. The statement was amusing, for although war material was made there by an Englishman, as stated (Mr. John Gray, for whom the place was named,) instead of "sabers," they were "Joe Brown's pikes," such as were used in the dark ages before gunpowder was made. The manufacture of such material was of no more value than the dirks carried in the earley part of the war, and there has been an erroneous opinion about them. There was not the bloodthirsty sentiment as has been charged, but the guns were poor and every conceivable precaution was taken in defense of home. When I mentioned my journey with Johnston to Sherman his face lighted with evident pleasure, and he said: "Was he through here?" Again at Cartersville about 200 men had gone to the station to see the general who made desolate the homes of so many people. There was no demonstration, but to gratity the evident desire to see him, he appeared on the platform of the car. General Akerman, formerly of Grant's cabinet, and one or two others shook hands with him. One person off in the crowd said: "General, we have improved a good deal since you was here." "Yes," replied Sherman, "we left a clear field for you!" And then, as the train was moving off, he remarked: "I see you have the same station, but you've put a new roof on it."

Having observed that in his "Memoirs" he could give no particulars of General McPherson's death, I told him Captain Richard Beard, of Murfreesboro, Tenn., had told me the particulars. He was in command of the skirmish line, and was himself standing near the line where it crossed a path in the woods. The gallant Federal officer galloped his horse quite into their midst, and seeing the Confederate officer so near him, he tipped his hat in instinctive salutation. With equal gallantry Beard presented his sword. McPherson turned his horse instantly and would have gotten away in a few seconds, but a Confederate had taken deathly aim.

Fish in Minnesota Waters.

Superintendent Watkins of the State Fish hatchery visited Lake Minnetonka Wednesday, and placed therein 300,000 white fish eggs, that were just ready to hatch. The eggs, which are about the size of mustard seed, were tenderly laid in a bed of sand and will be hatched in a few days. This is the second installment of white eggs that has been placed in the lake within three years. As one of the results of the first distribution the commissioners can show several plump fish, one weighing three and one-half pounds, that were caught at Wayzata. Superintendent Watkins also says that the great majority of the 100,000 salmon placed in the lake some years ago are still alive and propagating in its waters. He says that they are to be found in the deepest water. Prior lake also contains at this time thousands of large salmon, evidence of their being there have been proved entirely to the satisfaction of several gentlemen interested in piscatorial sports.

Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 26, 1881.

Gentlemen:—I have suffered with pain in my side and back, and great soreness on my breast, with shooting pains all through my body, attended with great weakness, depression of spirits, and loss of appetite. I have taken several different medicines, and was treated by prominent physicians for my liver, kidneys, and spleen, but I got no relief. I thought I would try Brown's Iron Bitters; I have now taken one bottle and a half and am about well—pain in side and back all gone—soreness all out of my breast, and I have a good appetite, and am gaining in strength and flesh. It can justly be called the king of medicines.

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.
[From the Boston Globe.]

Messrs. Editors:—

The above is a good likeness of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., who above all other human beings may be truthfully called the "Dear Friend of Woman," as some of her correspondents love to call her. She is zealously devoted to her work, which is the outcome of a life-study, and is obliged to keep six lady assistants, to help her answer the large correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its special burden of suffering, or joy at release from it. Her Vegetable Compound is a medicine for good and not evil purposes. I have personally investigated it and am satisfied of the truth of this.

On account of its proven merits, it is recommended and prescribed by the best physicians in the country. One says: "It works like a charm and saves much pain. It will cure entirely the worst form of falling of the uterus, Leucorrhœa, irregular and painful Menstruation, all Ovarian Troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Floodings, all Displacements and the consequent spinal weakness, and is especially adapted to the Change of Life."

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the law that governs the female system.

It costs only $1. per bottle or six for $5., and is sold by druggists. Any advice required as to special cases, and the names of many who have been restored to perfect health by the use of the Vegetable Compound, can be obtained by addressing Mrs. P., with stamp for reply, at her home in Lynn, Mass.

For Kidney Complaint of either sex this compound is unsurpassed as abundant testimonials show.

"Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills," says one writer, "are the best in the world for the cure of Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the liver." Her Blood Purifier works wonders in its special line and bids fair to equal the Compound in its popularity.

All must respect her as an Angel of Mercy whose sole ambition is to do good to others.

The New York legislature has passed, by a nearly unanimous vote the bill reducing the fares on the elevated roads to five cents. The managers claim that this action is in violation, or abrogation, of the right conveyed to the corporation with its franchise to charge a rate sufficiently high to enable the roads to pay dividends not exceeding 10 per cent. upon their stock. To this the friends of reduction reply that the stock has been doubled in amount by "watering," and that the companies cannot claim the right to earn dividends on speculative issues.

Dr. Alexander Mayer has proposed a novel system of burial, which, while obviating the difficulties and prejudices which at present stand in the way o cremation, he claims to possess all the sanitary advantages connected with that ancient method of disposing of the dead. His system is simply to enclose the body in an opaque glass coffin, hermetically sealed, to drive out the air from this receptacle, and to replace it with carbonic acid, or some other gas of antiseptic properties. By these means the body would be preserved as well as if it had been embalmed, and burial could be deferred, if required, for any period.

The London Times publishes an authoritive statement regarding the interview between Empress Eugenie and Prince Jerome Napoleon, which, it says, has cleared up some private misunderstanding existing between the ex-empress and the prince, and led to a formal recognition of the latter as the head of the Bonaparte family. The ex-empress was not called upon to express any opinion of her kinsman's general policy, and could not, consistently with the line of policy adopted by her while sojourning in Great Britain, do more than assure her cousin of her best wishes for any constitutional action he may take towards bringing about a plebiscite. The Prince states that if the popular vote should pronounce for the republic, he should bow to it. The republic has never yet, he says polled a clear majority of registered electors, and it is, therefore, governing merely by virtue of popular apathy.

The postoffice figures show that the observance of St. Valentine's day on the 14th of February once universally popular is rapidly going into decline. Once a sacred day to bashful lovers, it gradually turned to saturnine humor or silly extravagence, and the valentine was used as a vehicle for envy, petty malice, and ridicule, until vulgarity stamped it for its own and it fell into disrepute. The Christmas, New Year's, Easter, and Thanksgiving cards, costly and useless as they are, are works of art compared to the fluffy anc nonsensical arrangements of tinsel and lace which are offered as souvenirs of modest love, and are evidently gradually crowding them from the field. Only the gross lampon or flaming caricature remains to embellish the once poetic mating time o doves, and even these are regulated to the alley news-stand, and find no favor in the public eye. A few years more and St. Valentine's will be as highly shelved as Twelfth Night or Michaelmas.

Moncure D. Conway, in an article on the political career and the character of Mr. Gladstone as a statesman, has this to say of his Irish policy: "Whether any personal feeling mingled with the prime minister's practical reply to the murders in Phœnix park, Dublin, or whether under the blow he merely relapsed for a time into a rough plane of English pluck, in either case a great opportunity was lost. Ninety-nine hundredths of the disaffected Irish people, recoiling from that horror, held out a pleading hand to England, and the government struck it with a gesture of vulgar resentment Even Lady Cavendish had shared the hope that had risen in many minds that the blood of this young nobleman, who had gone to Ireland as a messenger of conciliation, might secure an atonement, which would be the best consolation for a great bereavement. But the moral sense of Ireland had been aroused only to be humiliated, and the obvious aim of the assassins, to prevent reconciliation, was rendered successful by the angry answer of the government. An impressive cartoon appeared in Dublin, representing Mr. Gladstone handcuffing Ireland at the moment when a masked figure is stabbing her in the back."

The immense flood in the Ohio rive is chiefly attributed to the destruction o the forests on the hills of western New York, western Pennsylvania, and western Virginia, whence the head waters of the Ohio are fed. That vast extent of hill country has been practically denuded of its trees, and the consequence is that the heavy snows of the winter, lying unprotected under the action of the sun and the rains of the season, instead of being very gradually melted, as they would have been had the forests been left standing, are melted all at once and rush down into the valley of the Ohio in an overwhelming mass. This mighty and destructive flood of the early springs will probably be followed during the heat of summer by a correspondent drought and scarcity of water, under whose effect the Ohio will become a shallow, sluggish stream, of very little use for purposes of navigation or any other purpose.

Mary Clemmer, speaking of the woman suffrage movement and some of the suffragists, says: "I have never felt the slightest sympathy with woman berating men in their public functions. Who has said that if men make the laws the women make the men? When a race of women arise so sweet, so wise, so strong that the race of men they bear and rear must wear forever on their plastic brains and souls the woman's mental and spiritual seal, women will command, through their natures and by their own wisdom, the things they want, and they will want more and greater than they do to-day, and speeches and conventions will no longer be necessary." Mary Clemmer has given the mothers a hard task, but not impossible of fulfilment, were it not for the fathers who seem to be, in the economy of nature, indispensible.

NEGRO HYMNS.

Religious Songs of the Freedmen of the Mississippi Bends—Kinds and Qualities of their Music—Typical Selections.

Arkansas Letter to N. Y., Eve. Post.

In every negro church there are two or three male and female singers whose voices give them place as leaders. They are proud of this prominence, and devote many of their hours to memorizing the words and tunes. Their memories as to both are prodigious, and it is a striking proof of the hold that song has upon them that often only with the utmost difficulty have I been able to get the words from them without singing. "Can sing de hymn right off to yer, boss," said one to me recently, "but fin' it mighty hard to recite de words widout de tune." The precision in time ofa negro congregation is absolutely marvellous for so untrained a body. Every note is hit with exquisite accuracy, and n their antiphonal hymns, when the men sing a line and the women respond the intervals are perfect. Though their tunes are very simple, and range through but a few notes, the wonderful flexibility of some of their voices produces almost the result on the ear of scientific singing; and no trained white choir can begin to produce the general effect of these negro hymns rendered by the men and women who have sung them from childhood. The rich voices of the famous Jubilee Singers are blended here with two peculiar tones that I have never heard elsewhere—one a kind of nasal elevation of the voice as the male singer utters a most singular "rasp" through his nostril, the other a female note pitched so high that it is more like steel scratching a slate than a human voice.

Very few of these hymns ever deal with anything but imagery and Scriptural pictures. But now and then is found one with a moral, like the following, aimed at the religious backslider;

Some join de church to put on pretents,
Until de day of grace is spent;
Sunday come its Christian grace,
Monday come dey lose der faith.
De debbil gets dem, they roll up de sleeve
Der religion comes on't and 'gin to leave,
Ole Adam has nebber been out,
When guilt condemns dem dey git up and out.

Still another class of hymns blends the secular and religious sentiment. A trifling and utterly nonsensical set of lines is closed with some religious exclamation which appears to be the only sanction for the use of the queer medley in worship:

Big ole black man hidin' 'hind de log,
Finger on de trigger, eye upon de hog.
Shiloh! Shiloh!

A better illustration is the following:

Good bye eberybody,
I don't care what yer call me—
Yer may call me long tongue liar,
But I'se goin' to Zion. Halleloo!

The proclivity of the negro for railroad metaphor, which we have heretofore spoken of in one of these letters, is disclosed also in their hymns:

There is a road which Christ hab made,
With heavenly tressles the rails is laid;
I'm goin' on dat line. Halleloo!

Some of these hymns are spun out to enormous length, particularly those set to a popular melody. I have often heard a single hymn sung rapidly without repetition of a stanza for half an hour. One composition has a stanza for each letter of the alphabet:

B for Babylon, dat wicked place,
She was destroyed in forty days.

And so on through all the letters of the alphabet. Of course, John the Baptist is a prominent subject here in hymnology; and one religious song with a grand, swinging melody stands perhaps, first in merit and popularity as well as in length.

If is called the "Jean de Baptist Song," and is worth quotation of several stanzas:

His name was John de Baptist,
And out of de water he sprung
When Jesus come to tell him
To fetch his people home.

CHORUS: Den run along on to Jesus—
Den run along on to God—
Den run along on to Jesus,
And get your sure reward.

Some says dis John de Baptist
Was nuffin' but a Jew;
But de Holy Bible tells us
Dat John was a preacher, too.

I'se waitin' all de night long—
I'se waitin' all de day—
I'se waitin' all de night long
To hear one sinner pray.

Den, please, God, save our country,
Our church, and pastor, too,
Our elders, and our deacons,
And all our Baptis—crew.

Moses and the prophets of the Old Testament are also favorite characters:

O Moses! Moses!
Don't get lost;
Stretch out yer rod,
And come across.
Daniel! Daniel!
Get out the fire,
Kill dem lions,
And go up higher.

One of the most melodious of the negro songs is made doubly effective by responsive singing, the women chanting the "O Lord! Yes," and the males rendering the alternate lines while both sexes join in the chorus:

As I was walkin' out one day,
O Lord! Yes.
I saw dem grapes a hangin' high,

O Lord! Yes.
I plucked dem grapes and sucked de juice,
O Lord! Yes.
De juice was sweet as honey meat,
O Lord? Yes.

CHORUS:
See me here, believe me; see me here;
All 'round de altar, see me here.
Jew kill my Saviour
One day 'fore I know;
Bury him in sepulcree,
One day 'fore I know.

One hymn that glows throughout with fervid negro imagery opens:

When de star from de elements is fallin',
And de sun and de moon dip in blood,
Sinnah! sinnah! Where will ye stan'?
But I sees my Jesus comin',
Wid a rainbow on his shoulder.

According to white authority here, the religious song first published years ago by Mr. Harris, the "Uncle Remus" of the Atlanta Constitution, and entitled "Uncle Remus's 'Revival Hymn,'" is largely derived from actual lines sung by the negroes and cleverly united. It differs from all the other negro hymns I have heard in having variations of the chorus. As perhaps the best negro hymn ever printed, two or three of its characteristic stanzas, given roughly from memory, may fitly close these selections:

O, whar will ye be when de great day comes,
Wid de tootin' of de trumpets an' de rollin' of de drums?
Full many a poor sinnah will be cotched out late
An' fin' no latch to de golden gate.

CHORUS.
Den come along sinnah, if yer comin';
Ole Satan is loose and a bummin;
Sin is sharp as a bamboo brier;
O, Lord, fetch de mourners up higher.
O, de song of salvation is a mighty sweet song,
An' the paradise winds blow swift and blow strong,
An' Abram's buzzom, 'tis deep an' 'tis wide,
An' right dere's de spot dat de darky ought to hide.

CHORUS.
Den don't be a stoppin' an' a lookin'
If yer fool wid ole Satan ye'll get took in.
Ye'll hang o'er the brink and get shook in.
So don't be a stoppin' an' a lookin'.

Hymn-books are, of course, dispensed with by a congregation of whom not one in twenty can read; and, if the hymn is unfamiliar, the officiating elder or his assistant intones two lines at a time, and the hymn is thus sung by sections. The deacons and sub-deacons, however, almost always con the hymn-books assiduously, turning the leaves in rapid succession, but the white employer of these deacons who make such a show of erudition will tell you that scarcely one of them can read a word.

TWAIN AT WASHINGTON.

Where, How and Why he Wrote His "Innocents Abroad."

Well, I was going to speak of the Indiana-avenue House and Mark Twain It was, I believe, some time in 1868 or 69 that I happened, with my wife and child, to be a boarder in that house. And shall I tell you who were the other boarders? For it was a regular Washington boarding house, with prices and accommodations slightly above the average. Well, there was George Alfred Townsend—to me a most lovable fellow at that time—and his pretty wife, and and then there was the handsome and manly Jerome B. Stillson, who was one of the most brilliant of war correspondents, the most intimate friend of President Johnson, and at that time doing magnificent work for the New York World—dead, now, poor fellow, with all his gentleness and sweetness of disposition; then there was Riley of the Alta California, a character equal to any of Dickens' or Thackeray's. And there was Mark Twain in a little back room with a sheet-iron stove, a dirty, musty carpet of the cheapest description, a bed and two or three common chairs. I had known Twain before. I was a correspondent of the New York Tribune then, and had been assigned to Washington two or three years before, in the good old days of Greeley. After Twain returned from his trip with the Christians on the Quaker City he came to Washington. He had been partly round the world and had seen a good deal. He looked at everything from the standing of a practical American and western man, and was "green" enough to look at things through his own eyes and weigh things with his own common sense. He knocked the old reverence and awe all to thunder.

But I get ahead of my story. After Twain's return from his great trip he came to Washington. This was, I think, some time in 1867 or early in 1868. Nobody knew him and nobody cared a rap for him. He was with Riley nearly all the time, and was addicted to John Barleycorn. He made his headquarters at the Tribune Bureau, and was not always welcome, for he was never good-natured, and was sometimes absolutely offensive, so much so that the correspondents did not always like to see him about—like George H. Butler, for example. I know that John Russell Young, who was then the managing editor of the New York Tribune, happening in Washington, dodged Twain, just as we now dodge Butler under certain circumstances. I believe he was all this time writing letters to the Alta, although Riley was the regular correspondent.

At that time we all did our work in our rooms, and when one of us got tired we went to the room of one of the others. If the other fellow was working hard he snubbed the visitor, if he was idling he welcomed him. At Twain's room, however, the visitor was always welcome, for by nature Twain is so lazy that he will not work if there is an excuse for loafing. He had a little back room that was a novelty, a museum, a hermit's cave, a den for a wild animals, and the wild animal was there. In this room Clemens wrote his "Innocents Abroad." I wish you could see it to-day, in the light of Mark Twain's present reputation and his half million of money. I am rather hardened now, but I remember it shocked me at the time.

The little drum stove was full of ashes, running over on the zinc sheet, which was covered all over; the bed seemed to be unmade for a week, the slops had not been carried out for a fortnight, the room was sour with tobacco smoke, the floor, dirty enough to begin with, was littered with newspapers, from which Twain had cut his letters. Then there were hundreds of pieces of torn manuscripts which had been written and then rejected by the author. A dozen pipes were about the apartment—on the washstand, on the mantle, on the writing table on the chairs—everywhere that room could be found. And there was tobacco and tobacco everywhere. One thing there were no flies. They smoke killed them, and I am now surprised that it did not kill me, too. Twain would not let a servant come into his room. He would strip down his suspenders (his coat and vest of course being off), and walk back and forward in slippers in his little room and swear and smoke the whole day long. Of course, at times he would work, and when he did work it was like a steam engine at full head. I do believe that if Clemens had not been under contract to write for the Hartford firm his "Innocents Abroad," he never would have done it. Of course, at that time Townsend, Stillson, Riley and myself never thought that Twain's book would amount to anything, and, probably, he did not think it would either, but he was writing for the money his naked MS. would bring from his Hartford publishers. He needed that money, and so he wrote. He is glad that he did write now, for that "Innocents Abroad," written in that little back room on Indiana avenue, in Washington, has been the making of the fame and fortune of Mark Twain. Whether he smokes the same stinking old pipes, whether he wears the same soiled under-shirts; whether he heats his room with an old, uncleaned stove; whether he swears at his own or other people's servants; whether he mopes and snarls and whines—well, I don't care. He is rich and aristocratic. He has edited a paper in Buffalo and another in Hartford. He failed in both. Editing is not his forte, Mining is not his forte. Humor is his forte, and you will excuse me if I say that coarse humor should be nobody's forte.—H. J. R. in Philadelphia Press.

It is a curious fact that the dignitaries of Queen Victoria's subjects races who visit London invariably return declaring that the wonder of wonders in and about the metropolis—the most remarkable thing, indeed, in the country—is the Crystal Palace. Even the Shah of Persia declared such to be his idea. The North American chiefs indorsed it, the New England chiefs said, so; Cetewayo was of the same faith, and now the "Indian contingent," returning to its native land, speak of the palace as the most marvelous of all English marvels. What attracts them, apparently, is the lightness and glitter of the great conservatory. Yet so little do Londoners care for the place that it has been decaying for years.

There is another fortune of $100,000,000 in England awaiting American heirs, and the McIlraths claim to be the lucky ones.

A LOVE SONG.

BY ANKREM COUCH.

I have watched the clock all morning—
The hands how slow they move
When I await the coming
Of evening and my love!

Bright through the eastern windows
I see the sunlight shine—
The minute hand is at just twelve,
The hour hand is at nine.

The world is fair beneath me,
The sky is fair above;
But oh, I long for the coming
Of evening and my love.

Warm on the southern windows
Shines down the mid-day sun—
The minute hand is just at twelve,
The hour hand just at one.

I am almost weary with waiting;
But a new joy fills my breast;
For though the sun moves slowly,
His path is down the west.

The face of the clock is darkened,
The hands no longer appear,
For the sun is set—it is evening;
And my love, my love, is here.

The Three Grandmothers.

"And you would marry this fellow," said Grandma Von Breeks von Starch, in her bassonniest (that is the only word I can think of with which to describe them) tones, "if you could?"

"Yes ma'am," replied Gertrude, meekly but firmly.

"The idea is simply preposterous!" declared Grandmother Huffey's fife-like voice.

"Preposterous indeed!" responded the bassoon. "More than preposterous—disgraceful! A mechanic! a common workingman! a house-painter!"

"He's a fresco-painter" timidly corrected Gertrude.

"Which amounts to the same thing," groaned the bassoon.

"Michael Angelo—" began Gertrude.

"Heaven preserve us!" shrilled the fife; "She's bringing some Irishman into the discussion now! Be silent, miss. We'll not hear another word from you. And understand distinctly, once and for all, that if that person calls here to-morrow, which no doubt he will have the impertinence and assurance to do, you are to dismiss him instantly, or we will."

"And endeavor to begin the new year"—the bassoon took up the strain again—"in a manner befitting a descendent of the illustrious General Von Breeks von Starch, whose unexampled bravery made him and Bergen-on-Zoon—the city of his birth—famous not only throughout Holland but the entire world, at a time when you were not dreamed of."

As for Great-grand Peeky, she had sat softly rocking to and fro in her cushioned rocker, munching her caraway biscuits—a store of which she always carried in a little satchel suspended at her side—sleepily regarding the group of talkers, and saying not a word herself. But that was nothing strange for her. She scarcely ever spoke save in monosyllables, and never even in them when Madame Von Breeks von Starch and Mistress Huffey were lying down the law (a favorite occupation of theirs, by-the-by) to servants, trades-people, or grand daughter Gertrude. And the last thing that could have occurred to either of the amiable lawmakers would have been the idea of appealing to the old lady for an opinion on any subject whatever. It sufficed them that she paid without grumbling the greater part of the expenses of the household out of the income which was to cease at her death, and yet allowed them to manage all things pertaining to it in their own way.

Gertrude—so named by Madame Von Breeks von Starch in honor of the patron saint of Bergen-on-Zoon—had lost both her parents in her infancy, and her father having been reduced to poverty some time before he died by various gentlemanly vices, she had been left wholly dependent upon her three grandmothers.

Of these Great grand Peeky was the mother of Grandmother Huffey, who in turn was the mother of Gertrude's mother, while Grandma Von Breeks von Starch held the same close relationship to her father.

The bassoon grandmother was at the head of the American branch of her family (she had been a Von Breeks von Starch herself, and had married a cousin of the same name)—a family of great prowess and many bags of gold in their father-land, some century and a half ago. She was tall, stout, and solid, with a round face, big black eyes, abundant iron-gray hair, and a carriage that immediately suggested to the beholder the last syllable of her aristocratic name.

The fife grandmother, five years her junior, was directly her opposite, being short, slim, and limber, with a sharp cut face, extremely thin, fair hair, and faded blue eyes.

Great-grand Peeky, notwithstanding her eighty-three years, was by far the best looking of the three (though she did look, I must confess, when munching her caraway biscuits, somewhat like a very nice meditative old rabbit.) Her snowy white tresses waved prettily above her still dark eyebrows beneath which beamed with a mild, dreamy light her soft brown eyes, and a pleasant winter bloom lingered on her wrinkled face.

It was from her Gertrude had received all the picture books and sugar-plums, almost always bestowed in perfect silence, that had brightened and sweetened her childhood, Grandma Von Breeks von Starch supplying the lessons in deportment, and Grandmother Huffey (let me whisper it) the punishments, usually afflicted with a slipper or back of a hair brush. But in spite of the lectures and lessons and other disagreeable things, Gertrude led a tolerably happy life with her three grandmothers until her eighteenth birthday. From that day dated such strict surveillance, so much sarcasm, so many scoldings, that even the hair-brush-and-slipper period seemed by comparison a regretable one. And all on account of the young man who came to frescoe the parlor ceilings. A handsome young man he was, possessing the highly euphonious name of Everdell Tremlitt. But neither his good looks nor romantic name availed him aught with the two managing grandmothers, who saw in him only one of the working day race, with which the Huffeys and the Von Breeks von Starches had nothing in common.

And therefore with no more thought about the matter than if John the manservant had been there in his stead, they allowed their grand-daughter to practice her music lessons, in the back parlor—the sliding-door being partly open—while he was at work in the front.

And so it happened that Gertrude, trying to play an air from memory, and finding it continually eluded her, was about giving it up in vexation, when some one softly whistled it behind her; and turning quickly on the revolving stool, she saw the young painter, brush in hand, standing in the doorway.

"Beg pardon, but that is what you wanted, is it not?" he asked as he ceased whistling, in a voice as deep as that of the bassoon grandmother, though much more melodious.

"Oh yes, thank you," said Gertrude, with a blush; and turning to the piano again, she played the whole air skillfully and gracefully.

"It's a beautiful thing," said the painter, still standing in the doorway; "but I think the song beginning in this way"—and he prepared to whistle again, when he encountered the frozen frown of Madam Von Breeks von Starch, as she stepped into the room from the balcony, and fled.

And the next day the piano was closed and locked, and the fair performer a prisoner in her own room; and Grandmother Huffey, meeting Mr. Everdell Tremlett as he came to work, requested him in one brief sentence "to get through his work and go about his business as soon as possible."

But Love—bless his merry little heart!—laughs at locks and locksmiths, and the very next time Gertrude went for her singing lesson to the Conservatory (to and from the door of which she was always escorted by either Madame Von Breeks von Starch or Mistress Huffey) she found there a new pupil with a magnificent bass voice, and that the new pupil was the fair-haired, blue-eyed, young fresco-painter. Not one word of this meeting, nor of the meetings that followed it two or three times a week for six months thereafter, did the naughty girl breathe to either of the three grandmothers, and the two younger of the trio exulted greatly over the vigilance with which they guarded the future bride (according to their long-laid plans) of Diedrich Von Breeks, the rich Holland merchant, due in New York with the new year. But their exultation came to an end on New-Year's eve. On that evening the Conservatory of music gave a pupil concert, and the very first duet was sung by Miss Gertrude Von Breeks and Mr. Everdell Tremlett. In vain had the latter begged to be left out of the programme; in vain had he summoned to his aid a mysterious throat-disease. His professor declared that sing he must, or loose his place in the conservatory, and, what was still worse, prove himself an "in-gra-a-te!" And so the three grandmothers, sitting in great state near the stage, were horrified—that is, two of them were (great grand munched her caraways as placidly as ever)—by seeing and hearing their granddaughter made operatic love to, in a very real love-making way, before a most fashionable audience, by the young man who frescoed their parlors.

In a moment the whole truth flashed upon their minds, and how they sat out the rest of the concert, so great was their indignation, they never knew. But at last, much to their relief, it came to an end, and the ominous silence with which they received the pretty culprit prepared her for the storm (the after-claps of which I have recorded at he beginning of my story) that burst upon her head as soon as they reached home. When it was over Gertrude was allowed to seek her room. Here she threw off her cloak, turned the key in her door, and took from her bosom a note, which she hastily read.

"MY DEAREST" (thus it ran).—"I suppose—in fact, I know—you will have a scene to-night, with her Royal Highness Von Breeks von Starch and her faithful Frenchwoman the Duchesse de Huffey. I am so sorry for you, dear! But don't let them frighten you; and don't be frightened at what I am about to propose. To-morrow will be New-Year's day. Consent, I entreat you, to begin the New Year with me. I have but a humble home to offer you, but in it waits the blessedest of mothers and the best of grandmothers (who will make your fourth) to welcome you. I shall be waiting, when you read this note, with a carriage around the nearest corner. Our alto and tenor will be with me, ready to act as bridesmaid and groomsman. Your grandmothers would never consent to our marriage, and unless you take a decisive step they will marry you, in spite of yourself, to your Dutch fifth cousin. Come, my darling, come. EVERDELL.

"P.S.—If you find it impossible to make your escape, why, then I must beard the lions in their den to-morrow, and fight a duel with the Von Breeks von Starch as soon as he arrives in the country."

Gertrude stood an instant in thought, then she glanced in the mirror. It reflected a bride-like figure, Dress of some-clinging creamy white material, daisy-decked head, a cloud of lace clasped at the throat by a tiny gold cross. She smiled softly, re-read her note, waited impatiently until half an hour had passed, and then unlocked her door, opened it, and listened. All was silent as the grave. Cautiously she ventured out into the entry, groped her way to the stairway, and began to descend the stairs, pausing on every other step to make sure that no one was astir and watching her. At last she reached the street door in safety. It seemed an age to her until she had succeeded in unfastening the heavy chains across it—in reality it was just three minutes—and then she felt for the key. It was gone! Her heart sank within her.

"Poor Everdell!" she said, and sadly prepared to retrace her steps—not daring to try the basement way, because the servants slept in that part of the house—when a faint light appeared above her head, and looking up, she saw great-gran, carrying a lighted candle in her hand, coming down the stairs as carefully as she had come down them herself. "She will call the others as soon as she is sure it is I," she exclaimed, clasping her hands in an agony of fear. But great-gran came straight on, without a word, until she stood beside the frightened girl.

"Here's the key, my dear," she said, in a whisper, and with quite a girlish air. "I've got a key that fits the general's door, though she don't know it, and I took this from under her pillow. Oh! if she'd caught me. But she sleeps like a soldier of the Revolution. And here's a little gift for you"—putting a small package in Gertrude's hand. "Law, child, how much you do look like me the night I ran away with Oliver Peeky! Your sweetheart's a good boy; I know all about him. Good-night, and a happy New-Year to you both!" And exerting all her strength—Gertrude standing motionless in her great surprise—the old lady unlocked the door, and gently pushed the girl out into the arms of her lover.

And when the flight was discovered next morning, the anger thereat was nearly equalled by the wonder in regard to the manner of it.

"She never went by the front door, for the key was under my pillow," thundered the bassoon.

"She could'nt have opened one of the parlor windows to have saved her life," squeaked the fife. "Only John and myself know the secret of the fastenings. And if she could have opened it, she certainly could not have fastened it behind her. Some of the servants must have helped her."

But the servants emphatically declared their entire innocence.

"There's no use asking me," said Mistress Huffey, looking rather spitefully at the old lady as she rocked in her favorite rocker and munched her favorite refreshment. "She never sees nor hears anything. But however the ungrateful minx got out I'm glad she's gone, and not a penny of my money does she ever see."

The great-gran's "little gift" proved to be a bonbon box filled with fresh caraway biscuits, in the midst of which lay a crisp thousand-dollar United States Treasury-note. But never did Everdell or his wife hear from or see her again, for very soon after their marriage she passed quietly out of life, and so will remain an enigma to them forever.

And madam Von Breeks von Starch and Mistress Huffey having succeeded in marrying the merchant from Bergen-on-Zoon to a distant relative of the Von Starch family—sought out and dowered for that purpose—departed with the bridal pair for that once-renowned military town, and "the land of the free and the home of the brave" knew them no more.

How Cold Waves Travel.

Cold waves, so called—a name for which we are indebted to recent meteoromological science—do not appear to move in some instances, much faster than a railroad express train. They vary, however, in their rate of motion. Where do they come from? It is not easy to say. It might be found, if one could travel at express speed, from the mountains of Montana and the frozen regions farther north, that the cold continued all the way to eastern Alaska, and on to Behring Strait, with even a greater degree of intensity. In fact, the coldest region is probably the wide expanse west, and especially northwest, of Hudson's Bay, in the neighborhood of the magnetic pole. A "cold wave" is a wave of heavy air, following the rarified track of "low barometer," and changing the rarified and milder atmosphere (which is usually also stormy) to one of clear, cold skies; a heavy air, full of tonic power, and exhilarating and hunger-producing to sound and healthy animal life. The establishment of the modern government weather observation stations, with their appliances, including the electric telegraph and the daily press, has enabled the country to see and comprehend something of the movements of these frequent cold waves. The movement is as marked as the advance of a veritable sea wave. It is one of the impressive facts of meteorological phenomena. The telegraph heralds its start from the Rocky Mountains, it always seems to begin there, though in fact it rarely does—having its origin much farther north), and its advance can be timed like that of a railroad train. Its speed varies from forty to sixty, or sometimes even seventy, miles an hour; usually it would seem about fifty. It rolls over the country, a real wave, an aerial counterpart, on the shore, of its congener, the tidal wave of the ocean; and its direction is usually from the northwest to the southwest. It sweeps down from the frozen wastes of the Asiatic shore and the equally frigid wilds of the American mainland in the Arctic circle, to our Atlantic coast—in breadth reaching the way from Nova Scotia to Cape Hatteras, and frequently making its chief presence felt as far south as Florida. The Bermudas—which lie just south of the Gulf Stream, a little over six hundred miles almost due east of Charleston—feel the influences of our "cold waves" very perceptibly. That solitary little group of small, low-lying coral islands, which can be reached by steamer from New York in the same time it would take to go to Savannah, happen to lie on the leeward side of the Gulf Stream. And that great thermal current of the ocean forever saves them from frost, and keeps them in spring foliage all winter; but, while it finely tempers and modifies the north wind it cannot quite rob it of all its intrinsic character—and the result is a wind that may be at times cool, and frequently boisterous, but never really cold; and these lonely islands, surrounded by wide-reaching coral reefs, have all winter the pleasant climate of spring. That is almost all that they, or the more southern islands of the Bermudas, ever know of our winter "cold waves." These come in an almost rhythmical succession, and have their causes, doubtless, as potent as those of the ocean's tides, which they strikingly resemble.

Extraordinary Career of an Adventuress.

Two suits for libel, in each of which the damages are laid at $90,000, have been begun in the Supreme court of King's county by Howard S. Ingersoll, a cousin of Colonel Robert Ingersoll, against the Sun Printing and Publishing Association and the New York Illustrated Times. Sinclair, Tousey, President of the American News Company, Isaac England, publisher of the Illustrated Times at the time of the alleged libel, are the defendants in the second suit. In the Sun of December 15, 1880, was published an article with the following heading:

Whipped on Barclay Street—Miss Freeman's story of Why She Resorted to the Lash—Attacking in a Public Place the Man Whom she Accuses of Trying to Injure her—First Blinding Him by Throwing Ceyenne Pepper.

The article went on to describe the attack on Mr. Ingersoll and the reasons for it as given by the girl, She is described as Aline May Freeman, a young English girl lately landed. In answer to an advertisement she entered Ingersoll's employ, according to the Sun story; as a model, and he had insulted her. She could not have him arrested in Brooklyn she said, because she had no money, and therefore, she determined to avenge herself by attacking Ingersoll as she had done. It subsequently appeared that the woman was one of the most accomplished swindlers who ever took up the practice of crime as a profession, and that she had made the assault on Mr. Ingersoll merely for the purpose of blackmailing him. Ingersoll had her arrested and she was sent to Blackwell's Island for one year and required to pay a fine a $250, which she paid.

It is claimed by Ingersoll that the publication in the Sun and the copying of the article into the Illustrated Times, which also gave an engraving of the alleged horse-whipping, ruined his business, from which the year before the publication complained of. Ingersoll claims to have made a profit of $15,000. Embodied in Mr. Ingersoll's complaints are the facts connected with the woman's career, which show her to be a criminal of rare accomplishments and extraordinary depravity. She was born in England, and her real name is Ellen May Stanley. She lived with a merchant named Freeman in London, and forged his name to a check for £2,000 in 1879. She escaped to Canada, whence she eloped with her employer to Cleveland. She subsequently joined a man named Roe, a London acquaintance, on Long Island, and afterwards she got a situation in the family of the president of the New York Stock exchange. At the end of three days she left mysteriously, and the next day three men attempted to blackmail her late employer. She next went to Montclair, N. J., and attempted to blackmail a gentleman there. She returned to New York and blackmailed a leading lawyer there, who gave her $1,000. In February, 1880, she was married to one "Billy" Morrison. She continued her blackmailing business, the injured husband always turning up in time to make matters warm. She next committed bigamy by marrying a young man in Downing street and two weeks later she was arrested on Mr. Ingersoll's complaint. Before the events described above had occurred, a woman named Mabel Carter turned up with a child at Pittsburg, in March, 1877, and told an extraordinary story of having been shipwrecked on her way from Bombay to England. On the night of September 1, 1877, a woman was found lying on the pavement near John Fitzsimmons, on First avenue, Pittsburg. She was carried into Mr. Fitzsimmons' house, where she said she had been chloroformed and assulted by three men. She left Mr. Fitzsimmons' house soon afterward, taking with her Miss Fitzsimmons' clothing and jewelry. Mabel Carter, alias Miss Waldron, now turns out to be the young woman who assulted and attempted to blackmail Mr. Ingersoll.—N. Y. Times, January 31st.

Miscellaneous Matter.

Senator Logan is reported as saying: "The trouble with the senate is there are too many young presidents in it. Every other man has got the fever, and got it bad. Result is the senate has became an organization for the filling of claims to the white house. But I can tell'em one thing, the more they've got the fever the less chance they have."

At Madura and other cities in India, when the missionaries wish crowds they adopt the expedient of erecting a white canvas, and throwing magic-lantern pictures up on it. The pictures are generally illustrative of events in Scriptural history, and are watched with great delight by the eager crowds. As an adjunct of the show, a cabinet organ is wheeled along on a platform cart drawn by oxen. The missionaries sing hymns to tunes which are played on the organ, and in some of these the natives join with much earnestness.

It has been discovered that a very large amount of gold coin recently minted in New Orleans is deficient in weight and will have to be recoined. A reassay shows that from $20,000 to $100,000 worth of $10 gold pieces, representing the work of several months, is thus deficient, the shortage in each coin being about 25 cents. An investigation will be made.

It will be remembered that some time ago suits for a large amount were brought against several cities for the use in steam fire engines of a valve alleged to be an infringement on patents owned by Marcus P. Norton and others. The city of Concord, N. H., one of the respondents, has filed a bill in the United States Circuit Court, setting forth that it has never manufactured or sold engines containing this valve, and that Norton had known of their use for a long time by manufacturers, thereby forfeiting his right to bring suit, and asking that Norton and his associates may be perpetually enjoined from further action against the complainants.

For twenty years prior to 1878 the vintage of France produced an average of $1,215,000,000 gallons of wine. Since that time it has fallen off rapidly, owing principally to ravages of the phylloxera, until last year the yield was 690,000,000 gallons, being little more than half what it formerly was. By far the greater portion of the wine that was produced was of the strong southern varieties, so much used for mixing and flavoring, The choicest wine growing districts have suffered most from the various destroying causes.

A new profession, that of accompanying young girls to and from balls, is reported to have been recently started. Hairdressers advertise that they will dress the hair of ladies and then escort them to their place of destination. When one considers the years that tired papas and mammas have submitted to the imposition it seems a wonder that the experiment has not been tried before, though, perhaps, there have been other escorts who have not considered themselves professionals.

For fifteen years a colony of bees had made their headquarters in a cave near Gridley, California. The only access to their treasure was an almost perpendicular wall of rock, and the difficulty of securing it had always been sufficient protection until about a week ago, when a party of invaders determined on an assault. They reached the cave and, after a three hours' battle with the bees, came off victorious. In the cave was found a solid mass of honey in the comb two and a half feet thick.

The absurd and extravagant method of disbursing navy pay is illustrated in some remarks made to the House by Mr. Hepburn. According to his figures, there are 124 officers in the Navy Pay Department, of whom twenty-five receive an aggregate of $110,000 as salary, while fifty receive $175,000 and the salary roll of the others makes up $587,000 in all. These men pay an average of only eighty-eight persons each. If they were all actively engaged in paying, their disbursements would amount to an average of $53,400 a year for each. The mere cost of paying the navy is equal to five per cent. of the entire amount disbursed. It is time that this costly and preposterous business should come to an end.

Why Ministers are so Much in Society.

There is much sympathy between thoughtful, cultivated women and clergymen, or ministers; for they are almost the only two sections of our modern society who read and think in an introspective and purely subjective way. Literary men are dying out, or they have been replaced by a class of bookmakers who think to order, and ransack libraries instead of their own brains; but the minister is usually drawn from the literary class, and often has literary antecedents, and his indoor life compels him to resort to books and his thoughts for companionship, which is what women are obliged to do, also, and thus there is sympathy and understanding between them. Perhaps this is the reason why ministers and clergymen, even of the most rigid sect, are found so much in society. Every woman who can afford to pay pew-rent gives a "tea," and her pastor must attend her tea; it would be a reflection upon her position or her standing in the church, if she did not; and for the pastor himself, it is almost his only opportunity of getting out of his routines of weddings and funerals, for all pastors are not famous enough to be invited to big dinners, and to make speeches at show banquets.—Jennie June in Boston Times.

The Sky as a Weather Prophet.

The color of the sky is often an excellent indicator of the weather. A bright yellow sky in the evening presages wind; a pale yellow, dampness. A neutral gray color in the morning is a good sign, while a ruddy sunrise forbodes bad weather, and a rosy sunset good weather. The clouds also tell their story. When their forms are undefined, soft and "fu- feathery," fine weather may be expected but the contrary when their edges are sharp, well defined and hard. Quiet and delicate colors are said to promise a good day, and deep, unusual hues, wind or rain.

FROST.

The pane is etched with wondrous tracery;
Curve interlaced with curve and line with line,
Like subtle measures of sweet harmony
Transformed to shapes of beauty crystalline.

Slim, graceful vines and tendrils of such sort
As never grew save in some fairy world
Wind up from roots of misted silver wrought
Through tulip flowers and lilies half unfurled.

Shag firs and hemlocks blend with plumy palms,
Spiked cacti spring from feathery ferns and weeds,
And sea-blooms such as rock in Southern calms
Mingle their foamy fronds with sedge and reeds.

And there are flights of birds with iris wings
That shed in mid-air many a brilliant plume,
And scintillating shoals of swimming things
That seem to float in clear green ocean gloom.

And there are diamond-crusted diadems,
And orbs of pearl and scepters of pale gold,
Stored up in crystal grottoes, lit with gems
And paved with emeralds of price untold.

And marvelous architecture of no name,
Facades and shafts of loveliest form and hue,
Keen pinnacles and turrets tipped with flame,
And fretted domes of purest sapphire blue.

All these the Genii of the Frost last night
Wrought through the still cold hours by charm and rune;
And now, like dreams dispelled before the light,
They float away in vapor on the noon.

THE BLACK BUOY.

"Swim?" said grandmamma, as we sat round the crackling billets one evening. "Every boy and girl should learn to swim. Why, I could swim like a duck when I was a girl. Dear me, dear me!"

Grandmamma sat bolt upright in her high-backed chair, resting her elbows on the arms and smiling across at grandpapa—who sat on the other side of the hearth—with a conscious look in her bright old eyes. Grandpapa, the general, pausing in the act of raising his tumbler to his lips, nodded and smiled back at grandmamma. They were both white-haired, bright-eyed and rosy-cheeked; both sat, straight and erect, in tall, red-cushioned oak chairs, and each saw the other through an effacing medium that smoothed out wrinkles, restored hyacinthine locks, and blotted out the fifty years that lay between them and youth.

Now, when we, the youthful descendants of this stately pair, grouped in lazy attitudes around the vast roaring hearth, with its tall carved chimney-piece, saw the meaning looks that were exchanged between our respected progenitors, we scented a story. And when a many-voiced appeal for the story broke from us, grandmamma hesitated for a moment and shook her head, then looking across to grandpapa, who nodded again, and after a little pressing, she thus began:

You know, young people, that you are of good family only on your grandfather's side, and not on mine; for he came of an old and honorable stock, while my father was only a ship's bos'n. My father was killed in a great sea fight when I was only a little child, and I was brought up by grandfather, who was ostensibly a boat-builder and fisherman, but in reality a smuggler. A successful smuggler, too. In those days smuggling meant great risks and enormous profits, for duties, especially on foreign wines and spirits, were exceedingly high. It was not only a profitable trade, but it was reputable in a peculiar sort of way; for it required great courage and great skill. England was always at war in those days, and the smuggler ran the risk of being snapped up by an enemy's cruiser as well as of falling into the clutches of a revenue cutter. In addition, there were the inevitable chances and dangers of the sea. So that a good smuggler had to be not only a man of great daring, but of great knowledge of navigation. He had to work into harbor on the darkest night, for it was only on dark nights that he could venture on "a run," with the utmost secrecy and dispatch. To do that he must know every inch of his way, be able to distinguish landmarks and buoys where an unpracticed eye would only see indistinct blackness, and know to a nicety the time the tide turned, the twists of the sandbanks, and the position of the sunken rock.

My grandfather could neither read nor write, and he had, as I think for that reason, a wonderful memory. He was assisted in his work by my two uncles, both illiterate men like himself, and the three seemed to find their way, through long practice and acute observation, as if by instinct. There was only one channel leading to the landing place, the mouth of the little river where we lived being almost choked by sandbanks which ran out to some distance. It was necessary to hit this channel a considerable way out at sea, and a small black buoy bobbed up and down to indicate its commencement. One side of the harbor was formed by a line of rocks jutting out to some length and shelving down gradually into the water, and the buoy was distant from the extremity of these rocks about three-quarters of a mile. This headland was called the Point.

The black buoy, a mere speck on the waters, was hard enough for anyone to find in the broad day; yet my grandfather never failed to find it in the dark—for of course it was only a moonless night that he could hope to run a cargo. The usual course of proceeding was thus: The lugger arrived off our coast at nightfall, lay to until a signal was flashed from our friends on shore, and then found the entrance to the channel, and worked in with the tide. It was necessary to be very careful in hitting off the channel at first, where the buoy was, or they might ultimately run on the sunken rocks at the extremity of the Point.

Grandfather and I lived in a pretty cottage at one extremity of the village. Our house was better than most of the others, for grandfather had money in the bank, and was well to do. The cottage was covered with honeysuckles and creepers; at the back was a well-stocked kitchen garden; in front was a grassy bank sloping down to the sand, at its junction with which stood our wooden boat house. By the boat house lay three or four of our boats, broad, strong and unwieldy; and opposite the boat house was the moorings of the Little Lady, our naughty, fast-sailing, clever little lugger.

I had a very independent, irregular sort of life. My grandfather was often away for days at a time, and the old woman who looked after the house—for grandmother was dead long since—would have had little time for scouring and cleaning if she had tried to look after me. I got a little book learning from the old vicar, but it was not enough to hurt me. No, my dears; I knew no Italian, no Latin, no algebra; but my eyes were none the less bright, my lungs none the less clear, my color none the less blooming, that I passed most of my days in the bright sunshine, and free, fresh air. I could run a couple of miles and jump a gate; I could pull an oar with the best, and I could swim like a duck. I was thoroughly at home either on the water or in it. The sea had no terrors or difficulties for me, except such as it was a pleasure to overcome. So, at sixteen, I am told, I was a fresh-colored, free-limbed, bright-eyed young maid, whose only trouble was her long tresses of thick brown hair, and who bothered her head very little with the other sex.

Not but that I had my admirers. But they were limited in quantity and coarse in quality. I mean rough; manly enough, but lacking in that refinement which a young girl in any rank of life always longs for, and with sometimes sad results. Anyhow, the bold young fisherman who made sheepish overtures to my formidable self excited nothing on my part but polite amusement, and I was quite whole. I was very happy, had a wonderful appetite, and sound in wind and limb, and perhaps, young people, you have to thank the rough freedom of my early life for the excellent constitutions which you now enjoy.

On a certain day in September, when I was nearly seventeen years of age, my grandfather being absent on one of his expeditions, and expected back at night, I set off for one of the long rambles in the country which I was in the habit of taking when he was away. As I was not allowed to go off in this fashion when grandfather was at home I made a big day of it, starting immediately after breakfast, and, taking some bread and meat with me for dinner, I rambled much further than I intended, lost my way more than once, and the night was coming apace when I returned. Tired and footsore, I was taking a short cut over the heathery cliffs, where was only a narrow track made by the sheep, when amidst my dreamy anticipations of supper and bed came the recollection of a little serge bathing suit, which I had meant to fetch in the morning in order to repair it. The little cave where I kept it was among the rocks of the Point, and from where I was, being already on the seaward side of the village, it was not far distant. So I stepped out briskly and soon came to the little gully or ravine in the rocks which led to my cave, and up which, in the course of the night, our smuggled treasures would be stealthily conveyed. Carts used to stand at the upper end of it to take them away.

I slipped into my cave, felt for my dress and found it, and too lazy just then to face the ascent up the gully again, stood gazing out to sea and wondering where my grandfather was at that moment. Then I turned homeward. I had got about a third of the gully, which was very dark, when I heard a strange sound. I stopped to listen. It was not the scream of a sea-bird, nor the moaning of the sea. It came down the gully, and drew nearer, beat, beat, with a little, very distinct, jingling sound. It was the tramp of men and the click of steel. Soldiers! I had never seen any, but I guessed what they were. In a moment I had scrambled cautiously up the rocks and hidden behind a ledge. I crouched perfectly still, with every sense on the alert. Suddenly the measured tramp ceased, and presently two men came slowly down the gully, talking in low voices. They wore long cloaks, and their weapons jingled as they walked. They passed me and stood at the lower end of the gully. The air was still, and I could hear every word they said.

"This is the place, sir," said the bigger and stouter of the two. "The goods are landed a little to the left of here, carried up the gully, and received at the top by the carts. The carts stand where we came down."

The other, who by the ease of his bearing and the deference of the big man, I took to be an officer, had a paper in his hand. He looked around him, evidently taking in the features of the place.

"There won't be any carts to-night, sergeant," he said in a pleasant voice. "The people in the village know we are here and will be sure to warn them. I hope they won't manage to warn the man we want."

"Not they, sir," answered the sergeant. "Not a boat can leave the harbor without its being stopped by our men, and not a man leave the village and come in the direction of the Point if you post the men as I venture to suggest." Here the conversation became inaudible for a moment. "A man at the top of the gully, sir, and the others at intervals on the seaward side of the village. You and I, sir, to manage the signals down here, and then I step up to the man at the top of the gully, one calls in another, and we are all down here ready to receive them."

"By all means," said the officer; "and as you know the place and I don't, you had better post the men. By the way," he added, scanning the paper in his hand and holding it close to his eyes, "at 12:30. I think it is the signal. You understand that, don't you?"

The sergeant produced something, probably a lantern, from under his cloak. "Here is the signal, sir."

"Then we're right. Now post the men."

The sergeant saluted and clanked up the gully, while the officer walked slowly toward the water and stood at the edge—some distance from me, for the tide was getting low—with his head bowed and his hands clasping the paper behind his back—I ventured to breathe freely again, and began to review the situation. What did it all mean? It meant that the authorities had got wind of my grandfather's doings, and had sent this detachment of soldiers to take him in the act. It must be grandfather, because there was no one else in the village likely to be aimed at. And if they caught him, what then? What was this form of words that kept ringing in my ears over and over again? "Transportation for life." What was that? It was no uncommon punishment, I had heard, for a smuggler taken, as my grandfather was, red-handed. For a moment the hope flashed into my head that he might not come that night. But no; the wind was light, and not unfavorable; there was no suggestion of a fortunate storm in the sky, and I knew that our friends with the wagons had arranged to come and that all was in readiness. My heart sank within me as I thought of my old grandfather's gray hairs dishonored in the felon's dock—for I had once seen a man tried—and his kind old face bidding me farewell forever. I bowed my head on my hands and longed to cry.

Suddenly I raised my head, and my heart beat with a loud resolve. I would save him. Yes I! The skill that I had attained for my own heedless pleasure should be put to stern service. My resolve was this. When the lugger showed her signal in answer to that treacherous one from shore, I would swim out to the buoy, and keep myself afloat at the entrance of the channel until I could hail our people and warn them of their danger.

I never hesitated after I had formed this resolution. I forgot that I was tired and hungry, put aside the thought of cold and exhaustion in the water, and began at once to make my preparations. On the narrow ledge of rocks where I now knelt, I undressed and put on my little bathing dress, which consisted only of a tunic and drawers. My own clothes I made into a bundle and stowed away behind a stone. Then like a cat, I clambered up the rocks, hiding behind every projection and keeping a fearful watch upon the sentinel at the head of the gully. Fortunately, the gully was not very deep. When I got to the top I crept on my hands and feet until I judged I was well out of sight, and started for the end of the Point. I took my time, for there was no hurry, and I had to husband my strength; and at last I reached the rock from which I meant to start. There I sat down to wait.

I did not know the time, and could only guess it by calculating from the sunset. How long should I have to wait? How long did I have to wait? Heaven knows; but it seemed an age. I got sleepy from my day's exertion. The night air was cold, too, and my clothing, however well adapted for exercise, was somewhat scanty for sitting in. Besides, it was damp. The wretchedness of that long watch comes to me now. Oh! would the slow minutes never pass?

Thicker and thicker grew the gathering darkness. The water and the heavens were blended in obscurity, and there, at the end of the rocks, I sat patiently, a poor little figure shivering in the gloom, listening to the lap of the waves as they beat upon the rocks, and peering out to sea with my heart in my eyes. I waited so long that I believe I must have fallen asleep and missed the signal, and at that thought I was burying my face in my hands to give way to despair, when something stopped me—a flash! far out upon the dark sea—there it was! I sprang to my feet, every nerve tingling. The moment for action had arrived.

I paused for a moment to picture to myself the bearings of the buoy. I knew exactly how it lay from the point, for I had swam round it often enough. But not in the dark. Not with the water a vast black plain, mingling with the black sky; not with the fear of sinking to those mysterious depths, unseen, unheard, unhelped. But I never hesitated. Into the cold flood I plunged and struck out boldly in the direction I had determined upon. After a few vigorous strokes the sense of active exercise, exultation in physical power and use of skill overcame my misgivings. But they came on again when I looked around upon that murky waste of water. Could I be sure I was going in the right direction? Might I not swim and swim and never find that for which I was in search, lose myself and become exhausted—to sink beneath that silent sky alone?

But on I went, struggling hard to keep my wits about me in spite of the horrors that would rush over my brain again and again. It was a physical work, too, for the tide was coming in; there were breakers in the shallows, and in the channel the stream was fast and strong. It was impossible to see more than a few yards ahead, level as I was with the water. With the tide running so hard against me it was difficult to see how far out I had succeeded in getting. Once I all but gave up. I got out of the channel into the breakers, and the buffeting and beating bewildered me so that I fell in a sort of panic. I threw myself on my back, and in the very act—thanks to my practiced eyesight, that could more or less see in the dark—I caught sight of the buoy. There it was bobbing up and down, looking to me like a thing of life. I swam to it and kept close by. It was like a friend in all this desolation of heaving seas. But now came the worst watch of the whole. The lugger must inevitably pass within hail of me, but what if my strength was ebbing fast? I had been without food since noon. I had walked many miles. Swimming is an exacting, exerting exercise, and I had still to exert myself resolutely, with the tide running fast, to maintain my present position. My limbs moved mechanically, my head was dull and heavy, and there was a sort of tingling in my ears. I knew I was going fast.

A little gleam of parting waters, a black mass looming blacker than the darkness, and I summoned all my energies for a shout. "Little Lady, ahoy!"

A voice came from the darkness: "Little Lady it is. Who are you?"

"Lay to and throw a rope over your starboard quarter."

The lugger was not thirty yards distant. I made my last effort and swam to her. A rope was thrown; they hauled me on board, and I had just time to give my warning before I fell fainting on the deck.

When I came to, the last keg of our cargo was being lowered into the sea. We were some little distance up the coast, and floats were attached to the kegs so that we might be able to find them again. So expeditiously was all this done that it was only some two hours afterward when we beat cautiously up the channel, and cast anchor opposite the mouth of the gully. We pulled ashore in our boat. As she grounded and we leaped out dark figures started up around, lights flashed upon us, and we were surrounded by soldiers.

"In the king's name," said the young officer, advancing with his sword drawn and his cloak thrown back to show his scarlet uniform.

It was a picturesque group, illuminated by the flickering light of the soldiers' torches. My tall old grandsire with his weather-beaten face and gray hair; the boyish, handsome officer, bright with scarlet and steel; the stolid seamen in their jerseys and sou'westers; the soldiers, with their bronzed faces and glittering accoutrements, and, I suppose, myself, keeping under shelter of my stalwart grandsire, disguised, as I was, in a suit of oilskins and a big sou'wester that almost covered my rebellious hair.

My grandfather said nothing when the young lieutenant ordered the sergeant to board the lugger, and only a quiet twinkle of his keen gray eye showed his enjoyment of the scene. He stood looking up at the sky, while the lieutenant kept his eyes fixed on the ground and toyed with his sword-belt. The soldiers had to row, and clumsily enough they did it, provoking one of the seamen to a loud guffaw, which was instantly suppressed.

The sergeant was back again pretty soon; his red face was purple with wrath. "We've been made fools of, sir," he exclaimed, saluting the lieutenant. "Nothing on board except some mess."

The lieutenant's face fell for an instant; then he looked at the sergeant's wrathful countenance, and bit his lip to keep from smiling.

The sergeant was at white heat. "With your permission, sir, I'll search these fellows," said he.

"If you like," answered the lieutenant, carelessly.

The search was soon accomplished, and they found nothing that they wanted. I kept behind my grandfather's back, hoping to escape observation. But the sergeant caught me by the wrist. My grandfather interposed.

"There is nothing contraband on that boy," said he, peremptorily.

"We'll soon see that," answered the soldier, grasping my wrist until I could have screamed with pain.

My grandfather did not strike him, but administered a kind of push with his heavy shoulder that sent the sergeant, big as he was, staggering a yard or two. With the loosing of his hold I slipped and almost fell; off went my sou'wester, and down, alas! streamed my long brown hair all over me. The young officer stepped between the sergeant and me.

"I don't think we need search this youngster," he said, in a tone of quiet authority. "He is not likely to have anything contraband about him. Where have you been to-night?" he added, turning to my grandfather, while I got into the background, conscious that the young gentleman's eyes had found me out.

"Lobster fishing," answered my grandfather, unblushingly.

"Not much sport, I'm afraid," said the lieutenant, looking abstractedly over my grandfather's shoulder.

"Not a great deal," answered my grandfather, "But we've taken as much as you, sir. Perhaps you would like to come with us some time and we might do better."

"Perhaps I will," answered the officer, still glancing over the other's shoulder. "Meanwhile, I am sorry to have caused you or yours any annoyance. Good night to you. Fall in, men."

And away they went. But my grandfather gave up the trade soon after that and sold the lugger.

Grandmamma paused and looked at grandpapa with a smile.

"And did you never see the lieutenant again after that?" inquired a bright girl of fourteen, with long, brown hair, probably like what grandmamma's once was.

"My dear," said grandpapa, "I was the lieutenant."

ONE WOMAN'S LOVE.

"Don't!"

Every one in that little group of chattering, gossipping women looked up in surprise as this one word, with its sharp ring of agony, cut through their shallow talk. It was the weekly gathering of the Ladies' Aid society, and as the fall elections were close at hand and the wave of prohibition had fairly inundated the village of H—, the conversation naturally turned upon the evils of intemperance. With that satisfaction which many really good people take in pointing out the rents in the moral habiliments of their neighbors, and philosophizing over the sorrows of others, they talked of the misery drink had brought upon various families in their vicinity, and of what they would do were they the wives of certain well known followers of Bacchus. Even pretty Mrs. Piper, whose young husband was known to be a little "fast," joined in this general criticism. To be sure, "Chawley" was "awfully silly sometimes," when some particularly good (?) company had led him to imbibe too freely. But she would not stand it if he got real drunk. She would go straight to pa's. That's what she would do. At last the minister's wife, at whose house the society had met, asked her daughter to read "The Drunkard's Home;" and tears flowed fast at the pathetic description of the very woes they had been witness of, without a throb of sympathy either for the poor victims of appetite or the loyal hearts that still clung to them.

Sitting apart, apparently engrossed in her work was a woman on whose fair features the angel of sorrow had plainly been chiseling for many years. She took no part in the conversation, and no one observed the set, pale face, bent so persistently over her sewing. It was only when some one spoke of the funeral of "old Zeke Lewis' child," and wondered how the mother could "take on so," that the white lips seemed forced apart with the appeal with which this story opens.

She met the questioning glances now fixed upon her with a look half defiant, half apologetic, and said: "Pardon me! but there are sorrows too sacred for words. You cannot sound with pebbles those awful chasms of human despair. Only those who go over the dark sides, clinging desperately to the jagged rocks, falling at last into the depths, can tell the agony. 'Let the dead bury their dead.'"

An awkward silence followed, until, to the relief of all, tea was announced; after which the company dispersed.

Mrs. True, who so abruptly terminated this flow of gossip, was the wife of the village physician. Of quiet, unobtrusive demeanor, she had won the esteem of all by her gentle ministrations at the bed-side of her husband's patients. Young, beloved, prosperous; what could she know of heart-breaking sorrow?

And yet there was a look in the dark eyes—an indescribable something about the whole expression of the face—that impressed one with the feeling that beneath that calm exterior the crucible fires were steadily glowing.

While others are busy with surmises, we will look in upon her as she sits in her own room, in the gloom of the short autumnal twilight.

She is pondering on the events of the afternoon, vexed lest she has betrayed the one weakness in the strong cable of love that anchors all her woman's hopes, and thinking with bitterness of the "Christian charity" of the professed followers of Him who said: "Neither do I condemn thee." Even the minister, at the funeral of the poor drunkard's child last Sabbath, took occasion to remind the father as he bent above the coffined form of his child, that unless he turned from the error of his ways he was bidding an eternal farewell to his baby. She can see it all now—the hard, defiant look coming into the face of the man—the stricken mother, whose form sways helplessly as she stoops to press the last kiss upon the little face that was her one ray of sunshine, then totters back to her seat by the side of him upon whose strong arm she should have leaned in such an hour. And yet they say coldly, it was a blessing this one hope was taken from them. It may be—nay, it must be, since He willed it.

But what would they say if they knew that the father of her own lost darling was a drunkard? Aye, a drunkard; not, it is true, to be classed with Zeke Lewis, for only to the heart that it would stab most cruelly was his slavery to the cup revealed.

Five years ago Marian True came to this little Western town, a young and trusting bride. Her husband, being the first physician in the place, soon found himself taxed to the utmost of his endurance by his long rides over new roads, and began to take "just a little liquor to keep the cold out;" then a little more to atone for the loss of sleep; and at last—could she ever forget it!—as she waited one cold, stormy night for his return, she heard some one fumbling at the door, and, though her heart fairly stood still, she went bravely to open it. As the light fell upon the face she recognized her husband; but oh, so changed! Who shall describe the look, sadder than death, where mind has lost its sway?

"O my God! Is this you, my husband?"

"Ye-e-s, 'ith me," (with a silly, sidelong leer and a vain attempt to stand uprightly.) Then, as he fell headlong into their cosy sitting room where she had set out a tempting little lunch against his return, she uttered a groan as though her heart were breaking.

"What in thunder are you bellyaching for now? Ain't I here all right? You act just as though you were sorry I came. Guess you were expecting some one else to-night."

Before this burst of drunken frenzy was fairly over he began to breathe heavily, and soon lay in brutish slumber, a repulsive, breathing corpse.

This was the first of many such nights during which the faithful wife watched, answering all calls, and turning away the more imperative ones to seek some other help as her husband was sick and would be unable to make his usual round.

These debauches were followed by such remorse, such promises for the future, that the young wife felt sure each fall would be the last; and though any unusual delay in his coming would send the blood curdling to her heart, she still looked hopefully to the future. Then came the joys, the cares of motherhood; and for "baby's" sake Herbert True battled bravely against temptation, and the skeleton in their home seemed laid forever. An unusually prolonged season of sickness kept Dr. True driving night and day, and again came the temptation to keep up his flagging strength with stimulants "just this once!" and again the old story is repeated.

At last comes a letter from the dear old father and mother. They would see their darling in her new home, and above all, grandma wishes to see the little namesake, whose cunning sayings and doings make up the bulk of the letters home. Mrs. True makes ready for their coming with many misgivings, lest love's watchful eyes discover the ghastly sorrow that dims her most cherished hopes, that breathes mildew on all that the future seems to portend. Ah, well! she has kept it from all the world; she must, she will, hide it from the hearts that would gladly yield up their life blood to save her a pang.

On the day of the expected arrival, little Mattie was carefully dressed and "curled up," as she always called the combing of the beautiful ringlets, so like to Grandma Grey's, except in color, and then "Gommie's girlie" went out to amuse herself, and "Mamma, I wont ever 'sturb oo ever again," sang the sweet baby voice as the tiny shoes clattered down the steps. In the first joy of holding again in her arms the daughter so fondly beloved, Grandma forgot her baby, and when at last, they sought her, she could not be found. Back of the house was a low, springy place, where a shallow hole had been scooped out and curbed, called by courtesy the well. To this the mother hastened with many forebodings, and there, floating in the cruel waters, were the long golden curls of her darling. When Dr. True hurried home to greet the father and mother of his wife, he found them bending in agony over the lifeless form of his idolized child.

What wonder that he said to himself "I must have something to sustain me through this terrible trial," and so drank again; at first moderately, then with an increasing appetite that threatened to betray him, until his wife said, "Herbert, if you must drink, let it be at home. I will attend your wants and excuse you to your patrons. This was two years ago; and how faithfully that wife had guarded this living tomb, let the fact that her husband's frequent illness was still attributed to his "overdoing" testify.

Christmas, with its precious tokens of love and good-will, brought Mrs. True a letter from home with a draft for $50 as a Christmas gift. Well she knew the loving sacrifice implied by such a gift from the scanty proceeds of the sterile New England farm. She could hardly wait to tell the good news to Herbert, for times were hard, and this would help them through the winter so nicely. He said, without looking at her, "I wish you would let me have a few dollars, I am a little short—" She stopped him with a kiss, and after endorsing it, gave the draft to him, saying, "Use as much as you need; you know it is because it will help you that I am so pleased." He took it and went out without even the usual kiss. Long the faithful wife awaited his return. In the uncertain light of dawn a man's form is distinguishable coming slowly up the walk. "Thank God; he is coming at last." But, no; a ring at the door bell. It is probably some one after her husband. Slowly, in a dazed, confused way she opens the door. The stranger begins: "Mrs. True, I have— There has been an accident. Your husband was hurt by cars. They are bringing him home." She neither spoke nor moved until the silent procession came up to the door, and then mechanically she led the way to the bed chamber. Without a word she lifted the covering and found death written unmistakably on the dear face. Only those that love like her can know—can realize what she suffered in that hour.

An unaccountable accident, said the papers, but one faithful heart knew that drink, and drink alone, had made her a widow. Now in the old home she waits, a broken-hearted woman, for the summons to join her loved ones.

KITTY'S PRAYERS.

Sweet little darling runs into my room
Red lips parted and cheeks aglow;
Fresh and rare as the apple bloom,
Brighter far than the roses blow.

"Oh, sister, come and see!" she cries,
As she smooths from her brow the tangled hairs,
While wonder speaks through her violet eyes—
"My little kitty is saying her prayers!

"Come and look thro' the nursery door!
We won't frighten her where she lies,
In the streak of sunlight on the floor,
Folding her white paws over her eyes.

"I wonder"—treading with light footfall
And daintily lifting the frock she wear
As she trots before me across the hall—
"I wonder if God hears kitty's prayers?"

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Criticising Rev. Joseph Cook.

The Rev. Washington Gladden, formerly of Springfield, Mass., but now of Columbus, Ohio, thus pays his respects to one of Boston's great men: "Joseph Cook, after circumnavigating the world, during which time he succeeded in mystifying the Hindoos, stirring up the Mahometans and teaching the jugglers of Japan new tricks, had returned to Boston, kindled his kerosene torch, spread his samples and began again to cry his wares in Tremont temple. He had set himself up as a champion of the old orthodoxy against the new, but in so doing had simply substituted for the latter the old hard-shell Universalism. All the alteration he had made in the chief article of the new creed was that he had changed probation after death to probation after breath. What Joseph was doing was whipping the devil around the stump, and if, as in this instance, the stump was exceedingly small, the question arose with the spectator, Who was being most hotly pursued?"

Prof. Swing on Broadness.

New York Tribune: In the Christian Register there is generally something to stimulate thought; and it leaves upon everything that it touches the impress of a Christian charity too rare in religious papers. Prof. Swing has been telling in a readable way some of the indications of broadness in the Presbyterian church, and appears to make out a very good case. The "broadness," he thinks, began with Dr. Chalmers and Norman McLeod. It is shown to-day in the fact that so few doctrinal sermons are preached in the Presbyterian church. The gospel, as applied to every-day life is mostly preached now. "A Unitarian or a Universalist," he says, "who may at times take a seat for the hour in some Calvinistic church will not often know from the remarks of the pastor that he is an assembly which holds to the belief in election, reprobation and eternal torments; but he will generally emerge from the house with his mind full of the flowers of toleration and duty and righteousness. If 'out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh,' we feel compelled to affirm that the Presbyterian heart has not in it the abundance of orthodoxy it once possessed." This is a strong statement to make, and many will not accept it. It may be that many individuals in the Presbyterian church are becoming more broad in their views; but they generally find it more comfortable to go outside. The very fact that the editor of the Christian Register was obliged to ask Prof. Swing, and not some orthodox clergyman in the church, to write this article, is in itself strong presumptive evidence against the position he assumes. The church may very well answer that it was for holding such views that Prof. Swing was excommunicated.

Other Religions.

In these days, when so much is said in favor of other religions than the Christian, it is well to bear in mind their defects. There are many who remember Max Muller's glowing eulogy of the Hindu sacred books, but forget entirely his admission of their puerilities and inferiorities. In truth, the Hindu conception of divinity is so sensuous as to debase and corrupt any sentiments that may gather round it. Still, the ordinary Hindu of to-day has a vague impression that after death he will be absorbed body and soul into a supreme being, who is beyond all the gods and goddesses. But his notion of a blessed reward for virtue, or a future punishment for sin, are so shadowy as to be almost evanescent. The Hindus have, indeed, a moral code binding on their conscience and conduct; they seldom or never ask themselves whether this code is an emanation from the supreme being; if pressed, they would doubtless acknowledge that originally it must have so emanated. The Hindus have no definite expectation of an earthly Messiah visiting India to rehabilitate the Hindu religion and to re-establish Hindu domination. Still a vague idea of this description does sometimes float across their minds. And in the every-day matters of practical life they are perhaps influenced by a conscience trained through religion quite as often as Christians. But taken as a whole Christianity has done more to elevate and ennoble man than any other religious system that has ever existed.

Useless Religious Societies.

The Freeman's Journal, in its usual able style, is fighting a good fight against religious deadheads. It is frequently asked by Roman Catholic literary societies to send a copy of the paper free, on the ground of a common Catholicity. It believes that this species of begging is destructive of self-respect, and ought to be stopped. Any journal which is worth reading is worth paying for. And then it reads these same Roman Catholic literary societies a much-needed lesson. It says most of them have no reason to exist. They have no worthy object; a billiard and the periodical "entertainment" are the sole attractions offered to the intelligent young Roman Catholics, in addition to the usual exercise of "bouncing" successive spiritual directors. "The Young Men's Christian association," it says, "for all its array of whited walls, at least helps young men to temporal self-improvement. The Catholic literary societies can begin to do it. When the question of how to help Catholic young men? is answered, then the convention will be justified in causing Bismarck to tremble, defying the French republic, threatening the government in behalf of the Indians, and making windy and mock-heroic resolutions."

Dropping from the Sanctuary.

The coarsest reed that trembles in the marsh,
If heaven select it for its instrument,
May shed celestial music on the breeze
As clearly as the pipe whose golden lip
Befits the lip of Phœbus.

The Indiana State bureau of statistics has completed its table of church statistics for the year 1882. It shows that the Methodists are ahead of all other denominations in the number of churches and members and value of church property, with the Catholics second, Christians third, Presbyterians fourth, and Baptists fifth in the list. There are in all 4,021 church organizations in the State, and 4,452 edifices. The value of property is $10,825,553. The entire church membership is 444,450, of which 53,839 members were added during the year. The average attendance at public worship was 420,812. The ministers' salaries for the year amounted to $1,247,913.

The board of directors of the Illinois Home Missionary society held a large and enthusiastic meeting at Chicago recently. The report showed a good financial condition, and the State missionary reported a number of revivals throughout the State, and in some instances the church membership has been nearly doubled. The society voted to grant aid to some of the weak churches in the State.

Religious liberty seems as yet to have little place in Bulgaria. A colporteur was recently assaulted in the public street at Shumla by a Russian officer, because he concluded that the Bibles which the colporteur was selling did not teach the worship of the Virgin. Another colporteur, who was arrested by the police, had boldly appealed against such interference.

The American Congregational union acknowledges receipts from May 1 to the close of 1882 of $62,262. Of disbursements, $46,200 have been paid to 58 church, on 55 houses of worship and 3 parsonages; and $54,733 have been pledged to 115 churches in 20 States and Territories, to aid in church-building, with $3,188 for parsonages.

The "General Baptists," who are open communists, number about 10,000 in Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee and Missouri. They propose to establish a denominational college at Evansville, Ind., and have conditional pledges to the amount of $20,000 for that purpose.

The British and Foreign Bible society held a meeting at Belfast, Ireland, Jan. 15. During the past year the total receipts of the society have been £199,785; the expenditures have been £190,738. The society is now publishing the Bible in 259 languages.

The Rev. Dr. Marquis of St. Louis, Mo., pastor of the Lafayette Park Presbyterian church, did not wear his robe last Sunday, because two of the members told him their spiritual comfort was disturbed by his wearing a gown.

The number of officers, teachers and scholars in the Sabbath schools connected with the United Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, is 2,574. The collections were reported at $3,200.

The Methodists expect to build 450 churches during the present year.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

THE SPHINX.

She doesn't live in Egypt,
Not in these later years;
She sits in a cane-seat rocker
And this is what she hears:

"Mamma, where's my pencil?"
"Mamma, where's my hat?"
"Mamma, what does this mean?"
"Mamma, what is that?"
"Who was General Taylor?"
"Where's this horrid town?"
"Have I got to do it?"
"Say, is 'rest' a noun?"
"Can I have a cornet?
Don't I wish I had!"
"Ma, if I got rich some day, Wouldn't you be glad?"
"This book says the dew-drops
Climb the morning sky;
Oh, what makes them do so?
Tell the reason why."

Hear the gentle answers,
Making matters plain;
Should she speak in riddles,
They will ask again.

"Something ails this slipper, Doesn't it look queer?"
"Must I do it over?
Fix it, mother dear."
"We must write an essay
On 'a piece of chalk;'
Mother, what would you say?
"Ma, why don't you talk?"

Children, come to auntie!
Let mamma alone!
(I sometimes think the patient sphinx
Will really turn to stone.)

The Little Cookie Boy.

Abbie's mamma made a little cookie boy. He had a head and body, legs and arms. She made two little places for eyes. Then she put him in the oven, with some other little cookie boys, and baked them all to a pretty brown color.

Our little cookie boy was taken out of the oven and laid upon the table. He saw Abbie and her brother and sister playing. He wondered whether he was like them. He thought he would ask; but Abbie's mamma had forgotten to give him any mouth, so the question could not get out.

He wondered next whether his hair was curly like Abbie's auntie's. He tried to feel, but Abbie's mamma had forgotten to give him any elbow joints, or make his shoulder blades loose. He tried to get up, but, poor fellow, he had no knees or hips. All he could do was to lie still and look around and wonder what he was made for.

While he was wondering, Abbie's mamma took him and tied a blue ribbon around his neck. She hung him up on a green tree, with little lights shining all over it. It was loaded with pretty things. He now began to feel quite vain. He thought he too must be very beautiful to be put among them.

One by one the things were taken off the tree. Little faces grew brighter as the little arms became fuller. At last our little cookie boy was taken off and given to a merry little girl. She squeezed him so tight that he wanted to scream. He did not think she meant to kiss him, but she did put him up toward her mouth. He did not know what to do. He could not faint and turn pale, he was too brown. He could not get away, for he had no joints. He was looking at the rosy little mouth so near him. He saw one of his own brown arms go into that mouth. Then he saw the other arm go in. He wanted to cry. Before he had time to be sorry that he could not, his head was popped into the mouth. He knew no more. The little rosy-lipped girl thought he was the best cookie boy she ever ate. My advice to mammas, when they make little cookie boys, is not to give them any eyes. Then they need not look on and see themselves eaten up.

The Young Preacher.

One Monday Steve, who had been to church the day before for the first time, thought he would have a church of his own. The four sisters were to be the people in the pews. Steve stood up and tried to look as much like old Doctor Brown as he could, but I must say it was not very much like him. Any how, he was satisfied, and his people too.

He got on a stool, and that was the pulpit. The others were in chairs. And if the young preacher did not speak very well, he spoke very loud, and seemed to think that was all the same. He read from an almanac upside down, and gave out some hymns from his little sister's spelling book. Nobody sung them, so he said he would preach some more.

I think he gave them, in all, some five sermons, all very much alike. He then carried a lunch-box around for the pennies. The girls all put in spools, and he seemed quite as well pleased. He wanted to preach again next day, but nobody came.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

The farmer came in from the field one day,
His languid step and his weary way,
His bended brow, and sinewy hand,
All showing the work for the good of the land;
For he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
All for the good of the land.

By the kitchen fire stood his patient wife,
Light of his home and joy of his life,
With face all aglow and busy hand,
Preparing the meal for her husband's band;
For she must boil,
And she must broil,
And she must toil,
All for the sake of the home.

Sun shines bright when the farmer goes out,
Birds sing sweet songs, lambs frisk about.
The brook babbles softly in the glen,
While he works bravely for the good of men;
For he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
All for the good of the land.

How briskly the wife steps about within—
The dishes to wash, and the milk to skim,
The fires go out, and the flies buzz about—
For dear ones at home her heart is kept stout;
There are pies to make,
There is bread to bake,
And steps to take,
All for the sake of the home.

When the day is o'er and the evening has come,
The creatures are fed and the milking is done,
He takes his rest 'neath the old shade tree,
From the labor of the land his thoughts are free;
Though he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
He rests from the work of the land.

But the faithful wife, from sun to sun,
Takes the burden up that's never done;
There is no rest, there is no pay,
For the household good she must work away;
For to mend the frock,
And to knit the sock,
And the cradle to rock,
All for the good of the home.

When autumn is here, with chilling blast,
The farmer gathers his crop at last,
His barns are full, his fields are bare,
For the good of the land he ne'er hath care;
While it blows,
And it snows,
Till the winter goes,
He rests from the work of the land.

But the willing wife, till life's closing day,
Is the children's, the husband's stay,
From day to day she has done her best,
Until death alone can give her rest;
For after the test
Comes the rest,
With the blest,
In the farmer's heavenly home.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

A Pretty Ceiling.

A country house may oftentimes be so prettily decorated as to be a joy to its possessor, and a home not in the least behind city homes in tasteful arrangement. In fact, so many more people in the country own their homes than do city people, that it seems almost as if they, as a matter of course, must take a pride in decorating and adorning them. We will not speak of roofs and verandas, and vines, etc., which all come outside, and concerning which the male members of the family must be more or less consulted before change can be made, but of the internal arrangements of wall, and woodwork, and ceiling. Generally we find the plain whitewashed ceiling in the country house. But it is no more needful there than in the city. It can be painted any color which contrasts well with the woodwork and paper of the walls. Then with a step-ladder, paint, brush, and stencil-plate, any lady can decorate her ceiling to suit herself. If she feels that she has not the skill—though it does not take much—she can purchase exceedingly pretty paper for the ceiling, designed in artistic patterns and colors, for moderate cost. This, however, needs care in putting on, that it may be straight and smooth, and the pattern not twisted awry. I think the paint and stencil plate far easier to manage, and if a simple design has been chosen it ought not to be considered a very great task to put it on.

Useful Suggestions.

Eggs are very high at this season and many housewives feel obliged to economize in their use as much as possible. Good coffee can be made without the usual egg by tying it in a nice linen or flannel bag large enough to allow the coffee to swell, pouring the required quantity of boiling water over it and letting it boil half an hour.

Brooms that are dipped for a minute or two in a kettle of boiling suds, once or twice a week, will last twice as long for the trouble; it makes them tough and yet more pliable. A carpet will not be half so much worn if swept with a broom treated in this way. No matter how often a broom is used it should be hung up as soon as you are through with it; standing it so that the weight rests on the broom part bends it out of shape and makes it almost useless.

Honey, that is quite as good as the bottled honey usually sold by grocers, may be made at home by the following recipe: Use seven pounds of light-brown sugar, one quart of water, and two pounds of honey in the comb. Melt the sugar in the water, and when it is perfectly dissolved, put in the real honey still in the comb. The wax imparts its flavor to the whole and can easily be removed when cool, as it will float on top of the honey. Add half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar to supply the slight acid of honey.

Sage is an excellent remedy for a canker sore mouth. Steep a little sage, strain, and sweeten with honey, put in a little borax—about one-quarter teaspoonful to one-half teacupful of the sage and honey; take a little swab and swab the mouth once every hour. It will do no harm if a little is swallowed.

People who suffer from cold feet may warm them without going to the fire in the following way. All that is necessary is to stand erect and very gradually to lift one's self up upon the tip of the toes, so as to put all the tendons of the foot at full strain. This is not to hop, or to jump up and down, but simply to rise—the slower the better—upon the toes, and to remain standing on the point of the toes as long as possible, then gradually coming to the natural position. Repeat this several times, and, by the amount of work the tips of the toes are made to do, in sustaining the body's weight, a sufficient and lively circulation is set up. Even the half-frozen car driver can carry this plan out. It is one rule of the "Swedish movement" system, and, as motion-warmth is much better than fire-warming, persons who suffer with cold feet at night can try this plan just before retiring to rest.

Severe cold weather affects very seriously the rising of cream on milk. If milk is kept in the cellar or a cold room it will have very little cream on it, even at the end of twenty-four hours. If the milk is set on the stove, however, and allowed to heat gradually until the surface commences to be covered with little waves, and then removed to a moderately warm room, it will yield quite a thick cream.

Kitchen Keramics.

A reliable recipe for French breakfast rolls: One pint of sweet milk, heated almost to the boiling point, half a cup of butter, a third of a cup of sugar, one cup of yeast. Let the milk cool so that it will not scald the yeast, and yet be more than lukewarm. Stir the yeast and sugar in it, and with the flour make a light sponge. When it has risen for the first time knead the butter into it; let it rise again and then cut into strips and roll in proper shapes, or cut it in round cakes and butter one-half of the top and double the cake over, a la baker's rolls. If started the night before and allowed to rise the last time an hour before breakfast, the time will be sufficient to insure delicious rolls. The oven should be hot, and from fifteen to twenty minutes will serve to bake them. The same correspondent asks how to make corn meal griddle-cakes: To two-thirds of sifted meal allow one-third of wheat flour, with enough sour milk sweetened with soda to make a batter about as thick as for fritters. These cakes should be left on the griddle a few minutes longer than if of buckwheat or wheat-flour alone. Be sure to add a good pinch of salt, and a little sugar to give a light brown color.

The plaid flannels which are offered at surprisingly low prices at this season of the year, make desirable covers for comforters. They are so firm that they do not need to be tacked very closely, and can be easily ripped apart and washed when it is necessary. Although one would prefer to be engaged in sewing on muslin and summer garments, it is nevertheless true that it is a good time now to consider the needs of another winter. A frugal housewife of my acquaintance says that every year about this time she makes two pairs of sheets, four pairs of pillowcases, and one or two comforters, and then she is never in need of these things, and making so few at a time it does not appear like much of a task to replenish her stores. Another feature of this case might be regarded by some women; it is often far easier to pay for two pairs of sheets at a time than for a dozen, the outlay of money as well as time being of importance to the great majority of housekeepers.

A cocoanut pudding to be eaten cold is a desirable dish, as it may be made and be out of the way while the heavy dishes of the dinner engage the cook's attention. Take a medium-sized cocoanut, grate it, grate also six milk crackers, place a layer of the crackers in the bottom of a well-buttered pudding dish; then a layer of cocoanut, and so on until the dish is full; now beat six eggs until they are light, the whites and yolks together; add a quart of sweet milk and sugar to your taste; stir well together, and pour over the crackers and cocoanut until it is all absorbed; sift sugar on the top and bake for an hour. See that the top is nicely browned before taking from the oven.

Instead of the conventional way of fricasseeing a rabbit, try this way; it was recommended to me by one who could hunt the rabbit, and cook it, too: Cut it up as if for fricasseeing; let it boil for fifteen minutes, then put it in fresh water; sprinkle a little salt over it; let it boil in this until it is tender, then drain off all but about about half a teacupful of the water, add a lump of butter and brown the rabbit in this. When done remove to a hot platter, add boiling water to the butter and water in the kettle for the gravy; pour this, when thickened and cooked, over the rabbit. Send to the table with stewed cranberries, or cranberry jelly, for a garnish.

Oyster croquettes are delicious for supper, and it is not too much trouble to make them. Chop the oysters and measure them in a bowl; then measure an equal quantity of potatoes that have been boiled and mashed very fine; add as much butter as you can afford to, or like; pepper and salt to suit your taste; moisten with a little cream; then make this in rolls or in cakes; dip in egg and fine cracker crumbs, and fry in lard. It is necessary to have plenty of lard in the kettle, almost as much as for fried cakes; serve hot.

Here is something for dessert which never fails to please the younger members of the family. Make a batter as if for waffles; to one pint of milk allow two eggs and enough flour to thicken; one teaspoonful of baking powder should be stirred into the flour. Fill a sufficient number of teacups with this and fruit in layers. Then set the cups in the steamer, and let the water boil underneath it for a full hour. Serve while hot with sugar and cream. Any jam is nice for this, or raw apples chopped fine.

An old-fashioned looking-glass, with a frame of brown wood, was improved the other day by an ingenious girl covering it in this way: She bought some pale yellow tarletan of sufficient length to allow it to be fastened to the top of the mirror and then to hang at each side of it in graceful folds; the ends were crossed at the bottom and fastened with a loose knot; and behold, the unsightly frame was hidden, and the appearance of this necessary article of furniture was much improved.

Nice little tea cakes, to be baked in muffin rings, are made of one cup of sugar, two eggs, one cup and a half of milk, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, a piece of butter the size of an egg, and flour enough to make a stiff batter. In this batter stir a pint bowl full of fruit—currants are nice; fresh berries in season, and even canned ones, with the juice drained off. Serve while warm, and they are a dainty addition to the tea table.

Now, when the country housewife looks with dismay at the empty jars of pickles, and fears that there will be none left for spring use, she can occasionally substitute pickles made in this way for those put up in summer. Take some small turnips, boil them until they are tender, then cut in slices a little more than an inch thick, pour cold vinegar over them, and let them stand for a day and night. A few pepper corns or kernels of allspice improve the flavor.

Emerson called the perfect plum "the fruit of paradise," and if one must eat pie at all, let it be a plum pie. Remove the pits, and unless the juice is thick with sugar make it so, adding a very little flour, well mixed in so that not one lump is left. The crust for a plum pie should be delicate without being rich; this can be accomplished by working the shortening into the flour deliberately with the hands. Bake with two crusts.

When baking a fish that is not oily it is an addition to the goodness of the dinner to bake potatoes in the pan with it. Peel the potatoes and cut them in thick slices, and serve them on the platter with the fish. The gravy that accompanies the fish should in this case be sent to the table in the gravy-boat, and not be poured over the fish. The potatoes, if perfectly cooked, will be brown and crisp and excellent.

A little magnesia and water will sometimes correct the acidity of a child's stomach, and render unnecessary any stronger medicine. Powder a teaspoonful of the magnesia, and put it in half a glass of water; it will not dissolve, of course, but will mix with the water so that an infant can swallow it. Give a teaspoonful of this three times a day until indications warrant you in discontinuing it.

A light and toothsome cream cake is made of four cups of sifted flour, three cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one of cream, five eggs, one cup of English currants, and a small teaspoonful of soda. This makes a large loaf and requires an hour and a half to bake. It is a good plan to line the entire tin with paper, so that the cake can be lifted out without breaking.

For the sake of variety try this for breakfast: Buy some nice pork chops with little fat about them; fry them a delicate brown, and pour hot tomato sauce over them. Make a gravy, using a little of the fat fried out of the pork; send to the table with baked potatoes, warm corn bread and coffee.

Do not throw away as useless the juice left in the can when you send the cherries from it to the table; it makes an excellent flavoring for pudding sauce. If you do not care to use it immediately, it is best to scald it and put it in a small can and seal it. Use it in the sauce as freely as if it were wine.

A teaspoonful of borax, put in the last water in which clothes are rinsed, will whiten them surprisingly. Pound the borax so it will dissolve easily. This is especially good to remove the yellow that time gives to white garments that have been laid aside for two or three years.

Latest from the False Prophet.

Ottawa contribution to the Cincinnati Commercial: In my letter of the 16th of January, published in Vennor's Weather Bulletin for February, I said that February would be warm and March cold. It is also well known that I foretold that the floods of Europe would be transferred to America in February. Your city is a standing proof of the truth of my prediction.

The only prediction I ever made that was not fulfilled was the storm for the 9th of February, and though my only mistake, I retire—in conformity with my promise to the New York Tribune—from the field of newspapers. Before doing so, I will explain, for the information of astronomers, the forces that produced the February storm. One began near the pole, to the north of Norway, passed down over Great Britain, then south of Hudson's bay, across Ontario and on to a point in the Pacific west of Mexico. Another force struck across Northern Africa, passed through the Gulf of St. Lawrence, over the State of New York, to join its more northern neighbor in the Pacific, where they were met by a third force, which arose in the South Atlantic, passed up through the Gulf of Mexico, and on to the point of junction. This point I had made out to be south of Newfoundland, having written down by mistake, eight days eleven hours astronomical time for calendar, which caused my storm to strike on the western coast of America on the night of the 8th, instead of on the eastern coast on the morning of the 9th, the earth requiring seventeen hours more to turn the Atlantic towards the forces that were to generate the storm. Wherever these storm forces passed, however, they left their work. The British Islands were strewn with wrecks on the morning of the 9th, train all over the Dominion and in some of your States are blocked up in the snow telegraph poles were blown down, in the State of New York, and vessels now arriving report that my storm passed over them on the Atlantic.

One favor I ask of you as an impartial critic. It is this: Will you kindly watch the movements of my great March storm, and compare its course with the map of it I have given in my Almanac for this year (a copy of which I inclose), and publish the result of your convictions? Your readers can obtain a similar copy of my Almanac by sending 20 cents to Grip Publishing company, Toronto, Ont.

A Fatal Horse Distemper.

Black Hills Democrat: We are advised by telephone from Spearfish of the arrival at that place this morning of the Ritchie brothers, stock men from the Little Missouri country, who report a large number of mountain Indians in that region. They also report the prevalence of a fatal epidemic as raging among the ponies belonging to the reds. Just what the disease is, is not known. The animals attacked live but a short time, and never, we understand, recover. The authorities of Montana should take measures to corral the heard out on the ranges until the epidemic has run its course. Should the disease spread to the settlements it would create terrible havoc among stock. It would not be a bad idea for the authorities of the Hills counties to establish a quarantine against all horses coming from that section. The cattle in that country are reported as quite thin in flesh, but vigorous, and that, with ordinary weather, they will pull through with no more than the usual loss.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

A good deal of feeling is evinced here because of the resignation of Lieutenant Commander Gorringe. The general sentiment is that Gorringe has not been treated fairly. He was simply forced to resign by the regulars because he is not a graduate of any naval academy. Frequently naval officers have referred to him as that "d—d mustang." They could not see for the life of them why Vanderbilt had selected that "d—d mustang" for the transfer of the obelisk, and ever since then Gorringe has been an object of even greater dislike. They represented to the secretary of the navy that Mr. Gorringe had committed the great crime of having expressed himself in favor of free ships. Chandler, without hearing the facts, wrote Mr. Gorringe a brutal and insulting letter. There was but one course left and that was to resign.

Secretary Chandler and Lieut. Commander Gorringe are measuring pens in a personal controversy, which doesn't do credit to either. Gorringe has resigned his commission in the navy to seek redress as an American citizen. He denies that he was conducting an enterprise on English money; on the contrary, he affirms that he is engaged in an American enterprise on capital subscribed by friends in New York. The nature of the redress Mr. Gorringe seeks doesn't appear on the surface. He promises his correspondence with the secretary as soon as the president shall have accepted his resignation.

The western people do not propose to be deprived from securing a portion of the Geneva award if they can help it. While no one in the west supposed that there was great fear over the upper Mississippi from confederate cruisers, claims have been filed for war premiums paid by the owners of boats on the upper Missouri; rendered necessary through fear that the boats might be destroyed by Canadians while on the lower Mississippi the owners of steamboats are making extensive claims upon the fund.

Senator McMillan thinks the provision of the sundry civil bill abolishing the pre-emption clause of the homestead laws may be stricken out by the senate if construed as an enabling clause. And that would seem to be about the size of it. Grand Forks telegraphed a protest for its people to Senator Conger.

Secretary Chandler has received the following telegram from Capt. Joseph T. Kerritt, commanding the United State steamer Richmond, dated at Hong Kong, 21st: "The Ashuelot is a total loss on Lamock island. Eleven enlisted men were lost; the remainder are on the Richmond, Admiral Clitz, in the Monocacy, is at the wreck."

Hon, K. Nelsson of Minnesola and ex-Gov. Kidder were on the floor of the house last week. Nelson was studying the ways of congressmen and otherwise informing the duties of a coming representative. He will remain until after the adjournment.

It is reported that Senator Ferry is lying very ill at his hotel, his condition being really critical. Only a few of his most intimate friends are permitted to see him. His condition is such that it has been necessar to telegraph for his sister.

The amendment to the homestead laws repealing the pre-emption feature thereof, will go to the senate in the shape of an enacting clause in the sundry civil bill, and it is believed that it will pass.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

A Hong Kong, China dispatch says, the United States steamer Ashuelot, an iron paddle vessel of six guns, 768 tons burden has been lost near there. Eleven of the sailors were drowned. No information of the loss of the United States ship Ashuelot has been received at the navy department. The report, however, was not at all discredited, as the vessel was not considered very seaworthy. In fact, she was a laughing stock among naval officers. She was a paddle-wheel, thin plated iron ship of 1,370 tons displacement, and was what is known as a double-ender. She was built in 1863, for the purpose of river navigation during the war, and was used in blocade.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF

In the United States court in the suit of Mrs. Nern against the Washington Life Insurance company, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was returned and the company was ordered to pay Mrs. Nern $2,125.23, principal and interest. The plaintiff sued for the amount of a policy of $2,000, issued in their favor on the life of her husband, who shot himself Dec. 20, 1881, at his residence. The plaintiff claimed the company should pay the policy because Nern was insane when he committed suicide while the defendants set up the claim that he was not insane.

Further steps in the case will be awaited with great interest by Iowa people.

The suspension in New York of Hatch & Peters is announced from the stock exchange. It is said the suspension was on account of the defalcation of their cashier, George A. Tompkins, who has embezzled and gambled away, between $75.000,000 and $100,000 of the firm's funds. The firm recovered about $16,000 from the gamblers. CRIMES AND CRIMINALS.

At Turtle Creek, Pa., two miners quarreled and agreed to settle their difficulty with butcher knives. Watson commenced the fight by cutting Flynn on the arm. The latter retaliated by stabbing Watson in the side of the neck. Both were soon covered with blood, which streamed from many hideous gashes in various parts of their bodies but they continued to cut and slash at each other until they had to desist for want of strength. Watson has about a dozen wounds some of them serious if not fatal. Flynn fared very little better.

At Chicago, Judge Williamson, in charging the grand jury impanelled in the criminal court for the February term, drew special attention to the general practice of carrying concealed weapons. The crime and violence arising from such a habit demanded rigorous measures. The state provides for such offenses a fine of from $10 up to $200. The judge called on the grand jury to see that the law in this regard was rigidly enforced.

Santa Fe Special: Capt. Aolazar, broke up a nest of cattle thieves at Lamesa, arresting three rustlers, and killing Eugeneas Pedras, a noted desperado who refused to surrender. Capt. PERSONAL NEWS NOTES.

Judge J. M. Shaw of the Duluth Judicial circuit has resigned his judicial position, to take effect at once, that he may re-engage in his lucrative practice at the bar. Mr. Shaw was appointed one of the Judges of the fourth Judicial district by Gov. Hubbard on Jan. 14, 1882, the position being made vacant by the resignation of Judge Vanderburg, who had been elected to the supreme bench at the state election held in the fall, but did not resign his position as judge of the Fourth judicial district until Gov. Hubbard's inauguration.

Dr. Henry Robinson, of St. Paul, died on Friday night. He was an old resident of St. Paul, locating here in the drug business in 1859. He was born in 1814, and came to America in 1848. From San Francisco he followed the gold hunters to Melbourne, Australia, where he continued to his trade until 1855. His next home was Chicago, where he resided until he came to St. Paul.

A week ago last Monday he disappeared and was not heard of for a week. When discovered he had been on one of his regular narcotic debauches.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

Smalley's London Cablegram: Mr. Forster's destructive attack upon Mr. Parnell and the land league has put everything else in the shade. When Mr. Forster sat down the whole house turned to Mr. Parnell, who still refused to rise, the first time in history that a member of the British parliament ever declined such a challenge. A meeting of the Irish party, held immediately after this scene, resolved that Mr. Parnell must speak. After twenty-four hours of reflection, Mr. Parnell resolved to leave Mr. Forster unanswered. The truth is that Mr. Parnell, though perhaps personally disliking the outrages, knew from the beginning of the agitation that his own leadership and the authority of the land league both depended on the prevalence of crime and violence. To have denounced them formally would have ruined him with the vast majority of his followers. To denounce them now would have the same effect. Having to elect between the English and the Irish public, Mr. Parnell chose the latter. The result is a total breakup of any possible public alliance between the Parnellites and the English Radicals. Not an English journal dares to lift up his voice to-day in Mr. Parnell's defence. All over England and Scotland there is one indignant burst of condemnation of the leader who deliberately refuses to disown the outrages and to disavow any possible connection between the murderous societies and the land league. There is every probability that another week will be occupied in debating the address, as Mr. Parnell persists in his proposed amendment impugning the administration of the crimes act.

The failure of the private banking firm of Mahon Bros. of London, Ont., is likely to involve several small manufacturers and business men. The chief cause of the failure was the carrying of too much paper. The liabilities are stated to be between $200,000 and $300,000.

What Home Means to Some People.

"Home" is the place where, in the morning just before he goes down town, she asks him for some money, and he is delighted to hear her and says:

"Why, my dear, why don't you do so oftener? I do declare, you wrong me. You do, indeed!"

"Home" is the very place where he can swear as much as he pleases when things go wrong in business outside, with men whom it doesn't pay to swear before. The place where he can't get mad and jump right up and down if he pleases; or sit in the corner by the "sacred hearth" and grumble, and growl, and snuff, and sneer at all she says or does from tea time until bed time.

"Home" is the sweet retreat to which he comes, at 2 o'clock to the morning on lodge and other nights, with state and extinguished cigar stump in his mouth, two more in his pockets, and, internally, full of vinous fluids.

"Home" is the place where she says to the caller she hates. "How glad I am to see you!" and the caller returns the compliment with a lie of equal force and weight.

"Home" is the place where burglars break in and steal, and robbers rob, and sneak thieves steal overcoats from the hall-rack—where the "help" gets drunk or mad and leaves suddenly.

Boys like home to eat in, to sleep in, to shelter themselves from the rain in and to go to when nobody else will have them around. Save on such occasions, and impelled by such wants, the common boy had rather be anywhere else than home—hanging around corners, loafing at the grocery, robbing orchards, sailing, fishing, skating, riding, crawling under circus tents, being sick with his first cigar, stoning cats, and going home from church with the girls.

Girls do not like to stay at home any more than boys do, and get away from it at every possible opportunity, and make all sorts of excuses to do so.

One trouble about "home" is that the butcher knows where it is when he would collect his bill, and so does the baker, the grocer, the milkman, the gas man, the coal man, the tax-gatherer and the church beggar.—New York Graphic.

A Crucial Test.

The very severe chemical test to which the various baking powders have from time to time been placed have demonstrated clearly to the public the relative merits of the different brands from an analytical point of view. For instance, Dr. Love, the eminent government chemist, in his analysis, made the comparative strength as follows:

	Cubic Inches Gas evolved.
"Royal" (cream of tartar powder)	127.04
"Charm" (alum powder)	116.9
"Dr. Price's"	102.06
"Snow Flake" (Groff's)	101.88
"C. E. Andrews & Co.'s" (alum powder)	78.17

The Royal Baking Powder was found, besides being of absolute purity, to evolve the highest amount of leavening gas of any of the powders tested, and hence it was placed at the head of the list and recommended for government use.

But the crucial test of the kitchen is, after all, the most satisfactory to the housekeeper. A baking powder that never fails to make light, sweet, wholesome and palatable bread, biscuit, cake, etc., upon all occasions is the one that will be placed at the head of the list by the practical housewife, and received into her kitchen for continuous use. This test the Royal Baking Powder has stood for over twenty years without a single failure, and hence its reputation as the best baking powder made has spread from house to house, until its use has become as universal as its merits are unrivaled.

Articles incorporating the American Railway Ditching Machine company have been filed at the capitol. The amount of the capital stock is $25,000, and the principal place of business Minneapolis. The incorporators are C. H. Prior, A. M. Long, J. O. Pattee and Charles W. Case of Minneapolis, and Frederick D. Underwood of La Crosse, Wis.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, February 20.

SENATE.—The house bill extending the time of filing Alabama claims passed. Mr. Sherman offered amendments to the tariff bill increasing the duty on wool and woolen articles. Lost. The tariff portion of the bill to reduce internal revenue tax was agreed to—ayes 37, noes 23. After several amendments had been voted upon, some being adopted and others rejected, the bill passed—42 to 19 the democrats voted with the republicans for it. The nays were Senators Beck, Call, Crockrell, Coke, Farley, Garland, George, Hampton, Harris, Maxey, Pendleton, Pugh, Ransom, Vance, Vest, Voorhees, Walker and Williams.

HOUSE.—The house took up the sundry civil bill, Mr. Kelley giving notice that as soon as the measure was disposed of he would press the tariff bill. Attempts to strike out the provisions for additional vaults for the storage of silver dollars were defeated.

Wednesday, February 21

SENATE.—Resolutions were offered for the appointment of a committee of seven to examine improvement works now in progress on the Mississippi below Cairo, and calling on the president for information regarding the alleged agreement among this and European countries regarding the settlement of the war between Chili and Peru.

The army bill was considered, and Mr. Logan criticised the administration of the signal service. The provisions abolishing the pay corps and limiting the pay for transportation on subsidized railroads to 50 per cent. of the usual charges were stricken out. The bill then passed; also the fortifications bill.

The joint resolution providing for the termination of the fishery articles in the treaty of Washington was adopted. The Utah bill came up and Mr. Hoar moved to strike out the section prohibiting the women of that Territory from voting on any question.

This bill is supplementary to Edmund's original measure under which the commission was appointed. It embodies the recommendations made by Hon. Alexander Ramsey, president of the commission, in response to a request for suggestions from President Arthur. In brief, it provides that in prosecution for bigamy or polygamy, the first husband or wife is made a competent witness against the defendant, for a system of public record for all marriages and for the abolition of female suffrage in the territory.

The following were the proceedings in executive session: Confirmations:

Lot Wright, United States marshal, southern district of Ohio; James H. Teller of Ohio, secretary of Dakota Territory; Arthur L. Thomas of Pennsylvania, secretary of Utah Territory. Postmasters: Gustave A. Drewizer, Sturgeon Bay, Wis.; George Phillips, Brooklyn, Iowa; M. F. Cheshire, Montezuma, Iowa; W. F. Richards, Clarksbury, W. Va.

Nominations: Algernon S. Badger, collector of customs, New Orleans, John B. Raulston, collector of the internal revenue Fourth district of Virginia. Postmasters: H. A. Patterson, Janesville, Wis; J. Douglas, Moorhead Minn., E. G. Butts, Stillwater, Minn., Christian Anderson, Valley City Dak.

HOUSE.—A further conference was ordered on the postoffice bill, the conference committee having reported failure to agree. The sundry civil bill being taken up, an amendment was adopted for the sale of military reservations no longer required by the war department. Mr. Beltzhoover made a fierce attack upon the administration of the signal service bureau under both Howgate and Hazen.

Thursday, February 22.

SENATE.—The resolution for a special committee to investigate the improvement of Mississippi river navigation below Cairo was adopted. The naval appropriation bill came up, and the clause devoting $1,000,000 for the completion of monitors caused a sharp discussion, in which the old scandals relating to the navy department were discussed. The appropriation was, however, voted.

The clause changing the grade of masters to lieutenants, and midshipmen to ensigns, had been striken out and the change was endorsed without opposition, as was the provision to abolish the pay corps, by assigning line officers to all vacancies, and thus in a few minutes was a master disposed of over which the house wrangled two days. The house clause abolishing the grade of commodore went out without a murmur. Senator Rollins was disposed to plead for some of these amendments, but he was cut off in the most positive manner by Frye, who said that they intended to make this a naked appropriation bill without any legislative features.

HOUSE.—The bill creating three new land districts in Dakota passed. Conference reports on the army, fortifications and Indian bills were made and agreed to. The sundry civil bill was taken up. Mr. Pound offered an amendment repealing the pre-emption laws, also all laws authorizing the filing of declaratory statements for the entry of public lands by an agent or attorney. It was adopted.

Mr. Washburn advocated the amendment, contending that the pre-emption laws should be repealed. The manner in which the public lands were taken up under these laws was a perfect scandal. No honest man could file a legitimate claim without being prosecuted by adventurers and land sharks. Now was the time to have this matter stopped. The public lands had been dedicated to actual settlers, and they should be guarded for that purpose. Congress should shut out this army of harpies and adventurers, who went out west in order to sap the life-blood of that developing country.

Friday, February 23.

SENATE.—Conference reports on the Indian and consular and diplomatic appropriation bills were agreed to.

The navy bill was discussed and passed, after Mr. McPherson had made an attack upon Secretary Chandler whom he charged with being a confirmed lobbyist.

The District of Columbia bill passed.

The legislative, executive and judicial bill was reported, with the house provision consolidating internal revenue collection districts stricken out.

The Utah bill was discussed until a quorum could no longer be mustered.

HOUSE.—The "Pound rule," calculated to expediate business, was adopted.

The sundry civil bill came up.

The clause authorizing the secretary of the interior to lease portions of the Yellowstone park was stricken out and a proviso inserted prohibiting the secretary from making any such lease, declaring invalid any lease already granted and authorizing the war department to take measure to keep trespassers out of the park, etc. An amendment approving the Sioux treaty and appropriating $200,000 to carry out its provisions was adopted.

Saturday, February 24.

SENATE.—The senate finished the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. As the bill passed the house it appropriated $20,319,180. To this the senate has added $216,120, mostly for pay of additional clerks in the several departments.

The provision which contemplated a consolidation of internal revenue districts, and a reduction of forty-four offices, was stricken out, as was also the provision requiring eight hours' labor in the departments.

An amendment to the internal revenue portion of the bill, providing for the traveling expenses of officers and clerks detailed on special service, and for averaging the fees of gaugers, was ruled out on a point of order as new legislation.

The committee had reported in favor of striking out the provision repealing the law of last year authorizing the appointment of an assistant secretary of war and an assistant secretary of the navy, but on motion of Mr. Gorman, the repealing paragraph was retained.

The salary of the public printer was placed at $4,000 per year.

While this was being discussed, the influence of the printers union upon the management of the government printing office received consideration.

A number of senators defended the union. Mr. Hale believed that the office ought to be open to every man and woman in the country. Mr. Plumb thought it was time to set down on the union and its dominating influence.

No action was taken upon the question.

The following nominations were sent to the senate; A. S. Graves, Red Wing, Minn.; Theodore R. Beers, Lyons, Iowa; John Beckwith, Des Moines, Iowa; Thomas M. Atherton, Osage, Iowa; W. Grant, Fargo. Dak.

The senate confirmed Gen. E. O. M. Lamberton, United States attorney for the district of Nebraska. Postmasters: James Douglass, Moorhead, Minn.; Christian Anderson, Valley City, Dak.

Emory Speers' nomination for United States attorney for Georgia has been withdrawn at his request, there being a question whether he was eligible to appointment while member of the house. He will be appointed immediately after the adjournment of this congress.

HOUSE.—The bill preventing the importation of adulterated or spurious tea passed. Amendments to the sundry civil bill appropriating money to the families of the late Messrs. Herron of Louisiana and Updegraff of Ohio, members-elect to the Forty-eighth congress, were defeated. The bill passed.

The majority report of the special committee, on the Mississippi river improvement was presented.

The report of the judiciary committee in the case of Thomas J. Major's claim to a seat as a contingent member from Nebraska, was adopted. It declares Majors and others, including Secretary of State Alexander of Nebraska, responsible for the misrepresentation on which the committee reported favorably in 1882, and refers the case to the district attorney of the District of Columbia, the attorney general of the United States and the governor of Nebraska for such action as they think proper.

The committee on rules reported a new rule to enable the house to take up the senate tariff bill and obtain a conference thereon, which was laid over until Monday. Mr. Flower introduced a bill to abolish all internal revenue taxes except on distilled spirits.

Monday, February 26.

SENATE.—Bills to punish false representation of officers and employes of the government and to prevent the importation of bad tea passed, and a resolution calling on the president for information regarding an agreement with other governments to bring about peace between Chili and Peru was adopted.

Mr. Vest called up and spoke upon his resolution for a committee to investigate the Yellowstone park, but the expiration of the morning hour prevented action upon the measure.

Mr. Vest said: Notwithstanding the fact that delay had ensued, the company's agent had gone on and commenced the erection of hotels, and, he understood, had contracted for 20,000 pounds of elk and moose meat to feed their workmen in the spring. He said they had not the shadow of authority for such an instruction and should be expelled.

Senator Angus Cameron called up the Fourth of July claims bill, the morning hour having expired, but Vest moved to lay it aside to complete the consideration of the Yellowstone Park resolution. He said if this were not done, the dedication of this tract by congress would be nullified.

Senator Windom said that he thought it would take more than hour to finish this matter. He believed the secretary of the interior had acted according to law, and that the parties accused of having taken unlawful possession of the park were conducting themselves in obedience to the contract.

The president sent the following nominations to the senate: Darwin P. Andrews, agent for the Indians at the Green Bay agency, Wis.; S. G. W. Benjamin, minister resident and consul general of the United States at Teheran, Persia; Wickman Hoffman, minister resident and consul general of the United States to Denmark; Lucius H. Foote, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Corea; Dwight T. Ree, secretary of legation and consul general of the United States at Madrid.

House.—The house refused to adopt the conference report on the post office bill and a new conference was ordered.

The senate amendments to the internal revenue (the senate tariff bill) were returned to the senate for the correction of clerical errors and received back from that body.

The deficiency appropriation bill was reported. The senate joint resolution terminating the fishery clauses of the treaty with Great Britain was adpoted. Mr. Robinson of New York offered a joint resolution requesting the president to communicate with the British government in reference to the cession in Ireland to the United States.

Mr. Reed called up the rule enabling the house to act on the senate tariff bill, and the house decided—134 to 126—to consider it. Fillibustering tactics were then inaugurated by the democrats. Finally a vote taken on the resolution resulted; Yeas, 120, nays 20. The point no quorum was raised and ulmately the house decided—97 to 96—to adjourn.

Rings for the Brides.

From a Chat with a New York Jeweler.

Are wedding rings expensive? Well, no; they vary in price, but the dearest of them wouldn't break a comparatively poor man. This is the cheapest we have fourteen carats and not very thick, and it only costs $3. This again is the most expensive I have in stock, weighs tolerably heavy, you see; finest gold used for manufacturing purposes, twenty-two carat, and cost $15. Seems almost too heavy to wear, doesn't it? But a ring that would gall and weigh down a woman's finger wouldn't be unsuitable to some marriages after all. Yes, I sell quite a few of cheaper ones. You would naturally think that as a man only buys one, or at most two such articles in the course of his life, he would not mind spending a few dollars on it. But that's according to how they feel too.

Some men aren't overburdened with sentiment. Why, a man bought a ring in September last, haggled over the price, and chose one at $7. Day before last Sunday he came in and wanted the size altered straight-way. He was dressed in mourning and looked like a well-to-do clerk. He explained that his first wife had died in November, and he was going to be married again on Christmas Day, and as the ring was "hardly worn" he thought it was no use in buying another!"

Rings are broader and heavier than they were thirty years ago, but as a rule the purchasers' choice is guided pretty much according to how the lady feels about it. They say that in England the thin, old-fashioned ring is coming in again, but in New York, as I say, the ladies mostly prefer a rather broad and heavy one, and before marriage anyhow a man generally is guided by his future wife's inclinations, and everything is done according to how she feels about it.

British Nepotism.

The impertinent London papers are making a great deal of sport over the fact that the queen has appointed her cousin, his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, K. G., G. C. B., to be a field marshal and aid-de-camp to Her Majesty in recognition of the valuable service he rendered the government during the Egyptian war. As his Highness observed the bombardment from the deck of the vessel, and after the flight of Arabi made his entree at the head of the Household Guards into Alexandria, it would appear that the honor is very well placed, and that the ridicule of the hirelings of the venal press is misapplied.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Wednesday, February 21.

Senator Clarke, introduced a bill requiring railroad companies to perform duties as common carriers in shipping grains.

A bill was passed providing for an annual appropriation of $30,000 for the state prison at Stillwater. The money is to be used to make the present cells fireproof, and to build new fireproof cells until the prison is capable of accommodating 600 convicts, and for other necessary repairs and improvement in the prison itself.

A very large number of local bills were introduced and passed. Among the general bills passed were the following: Providing for appeals in condemnation proceedings; probate courts to open defaults and set aside fraudulent judgments in probate cases; amending general statutes to allow building associations to loan money to other than their own members; making negotiable paper fraudulently obtained invalid in the hands of any party: fixing fees of clerks of the district courts and providing for appointment of deputies: providing for laying out of road on petition of twelve legal voters; appropriating $60,000 for additional building for blind and imbeciles; to authorize expenditures of $8,400 for farm for fruit and of $10,000 for on second hospital for insane; for $1,200 clerkship in office of secretary of state.

Senator Pillsbury, chairman of the finance committee, during the debate of the state's prison bill, incidently stated that even after the addition of a mill and a half to the state tax, now contemplated, the Minnesota rate will remain lower than that of any other state in the Union except New Jersey. He stated further that were it not for the improvements and enlargements of state institutions, rendered necessary by growth and increase, the state could almost get along without any tax levy on the people, so large is the revenue arising from railroad taxation.

House, Wednesday, February 21.

Mr. Rahilly's usury bill was defeated 44 to 48.

The special committee on temperance, to whom was referred the high license bill introduced by Senator Rice, have, after no little study, prepared a substitute, which was offered and adopted. It moderates some of the conditions of the Rice bill.

Mr. Brown's bill for the taxation of railroad lands came up on its third reading and excited the usual debate between the father of the bill and Mr. James Smith, Jr. The bill was lost by a vote of 47 to 22. Later in thd day Mr. Stigeman secured a reconsideration, and the bill was laid on the table.

A host of bills were passed, mostly of a local character.

By Senator Castle—Amending Secs. 1, 2 and 5, Chap. 20, Code 1878, relating to preservation of game. [This is the same bill that passed the senate unanimously on the 30th of January, and under a misapprehension, indefinitely postponed in the house It was reintroduced by request from the house.] Passed under suspension of the rules.

Amending laws for incorporation of religious bodies so as to allow bishops in case of formation a new diocese, to be divested of property belonging to the church.

Anouncements was made of the death of Senator McLaughlin of, Mantorville, Dodge county. The sad news reached the senate a couple of hours after life had departed and was heard with deep regret. Immediate and frequent reference was made to the fact that twice this session death had chosen a legislative victim; the first being Representative Richardson, of Winona. The senate was about to go into committee of the whole, when Judge Wilson obtained leave and introduced suitable resolutions of respect and closing as follows: That a committee of three be appointed by the president of the senate to attend to the funeral and to make such arrangements as may be appropriate in the premises. Senators Clement, Hickman and Morrison were appointed,

House, Thursday, February 22.

Senate, Friday, February 23.

Senator Morrison's bill for the payment of railroad claims—for board, services, etc.—was indefinitely postponed after a short debate, in which the old railroad war showed a little of its horrid front.

The Rice bill to reduce the rate on delinquent taxes from 18 to 12 per cent. was recommended to indefinite postponement by the senate in committee of the whole.

Mr. Brown's bill for the taxation of railroad land came up on its third reading yesterday, and brought forth speeches from James Smith, Jr., and Mr. Brown. When the roll was called, the bill fell two votes short of receiving a constitutional majority, 50 votes being cast in the affirmative and 28 in the negative.

Senator Wilson's bill proposing to limit the issue by towns of bonds to railroads except on two-thirds vote, which created so much debate in the senate, was favorably recommended in the house without debate.

In the senate, the bill appropriating money for the normal school at St. Cloud, was amended so as to make but $2,500 expendable for the present year, and allotting $1,900 instead of $500 for purchase of apparatus.

The senate indefinitely postponed the bill providing for insurance on hospitals for insane.

House, Friday, February 23.

On recommendation of the committee on retrenchment and reform, the senate amended Mr. Merriam's bill, to increase the contingent fund and clerk hire, by reducing fund from $3,300 to $2,000, and clerk hire from $2,300 to $1,500.

The senate bill fixing the terms of office of the state officers came back to the house with an amendment as follows: The official term of the secretary of state, treasurer and attorney general shall be two years. The official terms of the state auditor shall be four years, and each shall continue in office until his successor shall have been elected and qualified. The further duties and salaries of said executive offices shall each be prescribed by law.

Senate, Saturday, Feb 24.

Gov. Hubbard voted the bill reducing the rate of interests on sales of public lands from 7 to 5 per cent., his objections, as set forth in the veto message, being that the retroactive arrangement making the reduction apply on interest on moneys now due, attached in the house and agreed to by the senate, is unconstitutional. Attorney General Hahn has spent much time upon the matter and his letter to the governor, from which the points of the message are made is exceedingly full and comprehensive.

The question was then upon the passage of the bill despite the veto, and this—the usual—motion was lost by the vote of 11 to 28. Senator Clarke immediately introduced a bill rescuing the interest as did the other, but without the retroactive amendment.

A bill was introduced authorizing the superintendent of public instruction to issue certificates for teaching to candidates who are found fitted; superintendent to examine normal school candidates when requested.

After adjournment the Senate attended the funeral of the late Senator McLaughlin. The pall bearers were Senators Wheat, Waite, Chandler, Wilson, Goodrich, Fletcher, Langdon and Griggs and these, with all the other senators, accompanied the remains to Oakland cemetery where, except a short prayer, there were no services. The body was deposited in the mortuary chapel, and thence, when meteorological conditions will permit, will be taken to Mantorville.

House, Saturday, February 24.

Mr. Turrell introduced in the the house the senate bill which was amended in the house, reducing the rate of interest on land sales from 7 to 5 per cent. The house amended the first bill that came to it, making it apply to sales already made. Mr. Turrell introduces the bill in the form that it was passed by the senate, and without the amendment that made it objectionable to the governor.

The bill regulating fire protection for hotels and other buildings where large numbers of people are employed passed the house with but few negative votes.

Against the protest of the Ramsey county delegation, a bill was passed yesterday appropriating $8,000 to pay the city of St. Paul for the use of the Market house. By common consent the sum was reduced from $10,000 as contained in the original bill to the amount appropriated.

During the present session a large number of bills incorporating towns and villages have been referred to the judiciary committee, because of the amendment to the constitution passed in 1881 prohibiting special legislation. Numerous bills amending the acts incorporating towns and villages have also been passed. The question has arisen whether the legislation have power to pass such acts, and, if so, if such action be not special legislation and therefore illegal.

The decision of the attorney general, which was received and read, is to the effect that the amendment of 1881 does prohibit the passage of bills incorporating towns and villages, but acts passed previous to that amendment can legally be amended. This amendment does not, however, probibit the incorporating power of the legislature as relates to cities.

Senate, Monday, February 26.

The senate was in constructive doubt whether the senators elected in 1882 served for four years or two, and asked Attorney General Hahn to set the minds of the members at rest. He officially replied that senators elected in 1882, whether from odd or even numbered districts, hold for four years. Appropriation bills were passed as follows:

Asylum at St. Peter	$415,150
Asylum at Rochester	283,865
Reform school	103,507
State prison	160,000
Asylum at Faribault	145,000
Historical society	12,000
State university	46,000
St. Cloud Normal school	7,500
Mankato Normal school	2,500
Winona Normal school	2,000
	$1,176,522

Senator Waite stated, in introducing his bill for reduction, by one half, of the rates for the inspection of oils, that one shipping firm in St. Paul and Minneapolis (referring to the Standard Oil company's branch here) paid for inspection in 1880 more than $4,000 in 1881 more than $6,000, in 1882 more than $8,000, and it was believed that this year the amount would exceed $12,000.

A large number of bills were passed mostly local.

House, Monday, February 26.

The bill appropriating $12,530.05 for the unpaid expenses of the impeachment trial of E. S. Julian Cox was recommended to pass without discussion.

The bill making an appropriation of $18,000 for 1883, and $45,000 for 1884 and $30,000 annually for eight years thereafter to complete the states prison at Stillwater was taken up and passed after a lively discussion, during which Mr. Sabin replied with some warmth to what he denominated low-lived insinuations with intent to deceive the gentlemen of this legislature. Mr. Sabin begged the indulgence and made a statement at some length of his connection with the state's prison, the failure of the state arbitration and award.

The house was in session 10 hours but the bills passed were mostly local.

Death of a State Senator.

Senator James McLaughlin, of Mantorville, Dodge county, died at the Clarendon House, St. Paul, on the 22, of pneumonia. The symptoms were not considered alarming until 2 o'clock Thursday morning, when he was attacked by severe cramps, and from that time he commenced to sink rapidly, death coming to relieve his sufferings a few minutes before 9 o'clock. Bowed with the weight of years and a sufferer from a kidney trouble of years' standing, he was ill-prepared to withstand this last attack. He was all times cheerful, and would not permit his wife, who was visiting in Fargo, to be sent for, or any message to be sent her that would occasion any alarm. His nephew, S. M. McLaughlin, was the only member of his family with him when he died. James McLaughlin was born in Londonderry, Ireland, in 1817, and was therefore sixty-five years old at the time of his death. Before he had reached man's estate he came to the United States with his parents and settled in Coshocton county, Ohio. Studied medicine and practiced for some time in various places. He ceased the active practice of his profession in 1866, removing from Wisconsin in that year to Mantorville, Dodge county, where he has lived ever since. He has been prominently known in his own neighborhood, and has filled a number of local offices with credit. He was in November, 1880 elected a senator in the twenty-second legislature.

Edmund Blanchard's dwelling, in Cascade, was destroyed by fire. Mrs. Blanchard was sick in bed at the time, and upon discovering the fire, the hired girl took the sick woman and children to the granary, about fifteen rods distant, and covered them up nicely with quilts. Nothing was saved from the house.

The decision of the supreme court in the Lake Phalen water rights suits is that the company must respect the rights of the property owners.

John P. Peterson, an old resident and highly respected farmer of Waseca county, was run over and killed by a train on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railway, some miles south of Waseca Monday night. He was walking through a cut in which the section men were working at the time, when a freight train backed up at a high rate of speed in the cut. The section men hardly escaped, and Peterson was run over and killed.

Taylor Falls was vicitmized by the Chicago bucket shop swindle for from $3,000 to $5,000 in sums ranging from $10 to $500. A Swede, who was reported to be engaged to be married soon, lost $700.

A. C. Sheldon, formerly of New York, and for 15 years of Missouri, but now of the Red River Valley says: "Why men should waste their energies, spend their time and lose their life in the southwest, when so much is to be had in this land for the asking, is more than I can account for. I am captured; I am carried away; my health is splendid; the atmosphere gives me a new lease of life with every breath I inhale. Wheat, productive soil, health-giving climate, and a generous whole-souled people are inducements irresistible. Let everyone know of the wasting wealth lying at the feet of the newcomer; tell them not to doubt, but come, and come at once, and they will not want to go away."

Fight at Fisher.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: A serious affair occurred at the neighboring town of Fisher last week, in which a Norwegian nearly lost his life. A drunken row started in Lealos & Lavalee's saloon. A Scandinavian named Ole D. Aakhus interferred, and an Irishman named Peter Sulivan mixed in. These two went at each other like wild beasts, and the Irishman was knocked and rolled into a corner; but recovering shortly after he went out to the woodpile and returned with an axe, which was after a hard struggle taken away from him, as was also a butcher's cleaver. He finally got hold of a wood-rack stake and hit Aakhus on the head, knocking him down and furiously pounding him afterward. His skull was cracked, and both his hands broken and mangled while warding off the blows. Aakhas is in a very dangerous condition. The county attorney was telegraphed for, and Sullivan was taken to Crookston for confinement and trial. Both parties had been drinking a very poor quality of whisky.

'Twas Ever Thus.

Some editor out in the western part of Minnesota must have been in trouble lately, for he moralizes thus: "A knowing editor hits the nail squarely on the head ween he says the duties of a journalist are of such a nature that he is apt to criticise the actions of men in every profession or avocation; and sometimes his thrusts, though aimed at certain objects are caught by some persons for whom they were not intended. As long as he moves along in a smooth and easy manner, tapping one fellow on the shoulder, calling another a clever gentleman and the other a good business man nothing is said. But let him reverse the matter and say a word through the columns of his paper that is not of a flattering character and the same persons are up in an instant. The offense against their dignity may not be great enough to cause a libel suit or a quarrel, but they take their revenge by ordering the paper to be stopped. They have that privilege, but that does not stop the publication of the paper, and they will be compelled to borrow the next issue of the paper to see how the loss of a subscriber or two affects the publisher."

Land Laws Repeal.

Grand Gorks Plaindealer: The leading citizens of Grand Forks, while they think the repeal of the present laws and the amendment of the homestead laws would be detrimental to the best interests of the Territory, do not think it is at all fatal to the development of the country, although it may retard the rapid settlement. Mr. Tiffany, of the land office, yesterday said that the great cause for the repeal of the preemption law was the fact that frauds had been committed in the pine land districts, but that in the agricultural districts the frauds would not amount to ten per cent, and all could be prevented by executive action. The fact that a declaratory statement can now be filed before a settlement upon the land is one of the bad features of the present law, but this could be arranged by action of the department. Mr. Anderson said that if congress would make an appropriation for the purpose of having special agents of the land department look up the supposed frauds and watch the land business, the same as the postoffice business is watched, there would be no occasion for frauds. He thought the pre-emption law should be restricted to agricultural lands, and not allowed to be used on timber lands. The city of Grand Forks is really awake in the matter, and the defeat of the measure would be hailed with joy.

CORN AND OATS FOR HORSES.

The comparative value of corn and oats for horses may be briefly stated as follows: The former is deficient in many of the elements of nutriton so necessary for recuperating the constant wear and tear which necessarily take place in the body of a living animal. On this account horses which are exclusively fed on corn and hay do not receive that kind of nourishment which appears necessary for the due support and maintenance of the animal fabric; hence, we must not be surprised that corn-fed horses show evidence of being languid, by sweating profusely while being worked, lack of vitality, etc. Oats on the contrary, contain more of the essential elements of nutrition than any other article of food which can be fed with impunity to horses. Oats are not only the most natural food for horses, but are decidedly the most nutritious. They are the cheapest, because there is less risk in feeding them, and experience has proved that horses properly fed on oats and timothy hay can, with regular exercise, good grooming and proper sanitary regulations be brought to the highest state of physical culture, and can perform more work with less evidence of fatigue than when fed on any other article of food.—[Nat. EATING AT NIGHT.

BY A BOSTON PHYSICIAN.

Popularly, it is thought injurious, but unless dinner or supper have been late, or the stomach disordered, it is harmless and beneficial, i. e., if one be hungry. Four or five hours having elapsed since the last meal, invalids and the delicate should always eat at bedtime. This seems heretical, but is not. Food, of simple kind, will induce sleep. Animals after eating instinctively sleep. Human beings become drowsy after a full meal, Why? Because blood is solicited toward the stomach to supply the juices needed in digestion. Hence the brain receives less blood than during fasting, becomes pale and the powers grow dormant. Sleep therefore ensues. This is physiologicol. The sinking sensation in sleeplessness is a call for food. Wakefulness often is merely a symptom of hunger. Gratify the desire and you fall asleep. The writer recently was called, at 2 a. m., to a lady who assured him she was dying. The body was warm, the heart doing honest work. To her indignation, he ordered buttered bread (hot milk or beef-tea were better) to be eaten at once. Obeying, the moribund lady was soon surprised by a return of life and a desire to sleep.

The feeble will be stronger at dawn if they eat on going to bed. Fourteen hours lie between supper and breakfast by that time the fuel of the body has become expended. Consequently, the morning toilet fatigues many. Let such eat at bed time, and take a glass of warm milk or beef-tea before rising. Increased vigor will result. "But the stomach must rest." True. Yet when hungry we should eat. Does the infant's stomach rest as long as the adult's? The latter eats less often merely because his food requires more time for digestion. Seldom can one remain awake until 10:30 or 11 p. m., without hunger. Satisfy it and sleep will be sounder.

During the night give wakeful children food. Sleep will follow. The sick should invariably eat during the night. This is imperative. At night, the delicate and children may take slowy, warm milk, beef-tea, or oatmeal gruel. Vigorous adults may also eat bread and milk, cold beef, mutton, chicken and bread, raw oysters, all, of course, in moderation. Do not eat if not hungry. Eat if you are.—[Congregationalist.

FARM NOTES.

Minnesota Tribune.

HIGH WATER THIS SPRING.

It does not necessarily follow that the fact that we have a deep snow this winter that we shall have high water this spring, but the probabilities are that such will be the case. While much of the snow will disappear in a gradual manner by evaporation caused by the warm rays of the sun, the greatest portion will be liable to be melted by the March and April winds and the warm rains that are almost sure to occur in early spring. There is a great quantity of snow on the surface of the soil thorughout the whole Northwest. The ravines and hollows are full to overflowing, and should it disappear suddenly, there can be but one result—a flood. With this in view, farmers who have fuel, agricultural implements and other articles in low places and on the banks of rivers, creeks or brooks liable to overflow, should, before the "ides of March," remove them to a place of safety.

It is very true we do not always have high water in the spring in consequence of the deep snow of a previous winter. In 1848-9 and 1856-7 there was as large a depth of snow as there is this winter, and yet the spring of these two years were not followed by a flood. On the other hand, two years ago, on the disappearance of the snow, high water prevailed throughout the whole Northwest, and such may be the result this spring. We have, in different parts of the world, been visited with floods, cold weather and other disasters ever since the inauguration of the new year, and the Northwest is liable this spring to come in for at least a liberal share of the water.

A WORD ABOUT SEED CORN.

One of the greatest inconvenience and annoyances to the farmer is poor seed corn. Last spring the whole West was full of worthless seed, fields and fields had been planted and replanted and then in many instances failed. From the lateness of the corn crop maturing last fall we may expect that the same trouble will be repeated this spring, and it behooves those who have not their seed at this time to secure it at once. Even those who have it should give it a thorough trial and prove that it is good. By placing a few grains or kernels selected from different ears in a box or vessel filled with earth and put in a warm room the test can be made inside of a week. A great many are deceived in regard to their seed. The corn looks bright and was apparently saved and cured in good condition, but the germ is blighted, probably by a slight frost or not sufficiently dried when gathered and affected by the cold. If the germ is of a natural color and oily it will grow, but if colored it will not. A gentleman recently informed us that he had a large quantity of corn that would make good seed. On examination we found that the germs were all killed, not a solitary kernal would grow, and yet we never saw an apparently better selection of seed. We are of the opinion, from the best information that we can gather, that there is plenty of seed in the country, but are satisfied that much which has been saved for that purpose won't grow. Farmers who are not perfectly sure that they have good seed should secure it now, and those that are in the habit of only purchasing it just before they want to plant should in like manner get it at once. They have time now, which they won't have when seeding comes.

COMBINATION BUGGY GEAR. WITH LONGITUDINAL SPRING.

The Combination Buggy, (cash price at factory, $100,) of which the above cut represents the Gear, has become known as the very best for easy riding and durable qualities. Years of most trying use, in private and in livery, has abundantly proved this fact. These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the torsional strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds to the elasticity of the springs producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—steel tires and axles, trimmings of never-fading cloth or fancy leather.

County News.

Carman Happenings.

Carman Courier.

Mr. J. G. Elwood, the efficient manager and wheat buyer of the Corser elevator at this place, left for Minneapolis Monday evening, intending to be absent for some weeks.

For a time last Friday the residence of Mr. Stone was thought to be on fire, but upon investigation proved to be only one of the flues burning out. Too much care cannot be exercised by families in the use of fire when the wind is blowing as it was then, as no earthly power could save a building when once fired.

A lively run-away was occasioned Saturday by leaving a horse unhitched in front of Messrs. Linand & Veaux' blacksmith shop. The horse was stopped before much damage had been done to the rig, and right here we wish to remark that there is altogether too much of this thing of leaving horses standing in front of our business centre without being fastened. Some day some one will be run over and injured by the frightened horses.

East Grand Forks Facts.

From the Courier.

No 1 hard quoted at 96 cents; oats 50 cents; corn, firm at $1.

Messrs Christian and Burrows, real estate dealers from Grand Forks, were in town Wednesday negotiating for town lots.

A load of young people came over from the Forks last Tuesday night and tripped the "light fantastic" at the Lewis House until almost daylight.

Wheat has taken another jump and No 1 hard is now quoted at 96 cents As a consequence we again see long lines of wagons awaiting their turn at the elevators.

The people are at last awakening to the importance of having the Red Lake pineries opened at once, and numerous petitions tending to that end are being circulated and signed.

During the snow storm the latter part of last week one of the large lights in the front part of Hope Bros. store was blown in and they were compelled to move a part of their goods to avoid the damage by snow.

Z. M. Hunt, who has been visiting in Ridgeway, N. Y, for the past two months, has returned to East Grand Forks and is making active preparations for raising a large crop of No. 1 hard on his farm near here.

We want and must have a brick yard to supply the great demand for building purposes in a very short time. To a practical brick maker the ground for that purpose will be given and substantial aid will be given if necessary.

Our Chamber of Commerce at a meeting held last Monday night, passed resolutions condemning the action of the county commissioners in the location of the bridge across Red Lake River at this point.

A certain young blood from over the Red had a lively time in attempting to drive through a 8-foot snow drift in front of Captain Barton's store last Sunday. The horse floundered around in the snow and finally became unmanageable and upset the cutter. The young ladies who accompanied him were thrown out and almost lost in the deep snow. After considerable delay the rig was righted and the young man went on his way.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

The irregular individual, Tolef Grundysen, is reported to be at Ada, with both hands and feet frosted.

All the signs of the times point to an early planting season. There is little frost and only an ordinary fall of snow.

Gunder Krostue, one of the growing young business men of Fisher, started on Thursday for Sheridan, Waupaca County, Wis., for a brief visit among kindred and friends.

Last Saturday ninety-six Indian children in attendance at the Catholic school at Fort Totten, were quickly turned out in the cold by the sudden burning of the mission building.

We are informed that there is to be a change in the railroad land office at Crookston, next week, Mr. Thos. Shapleigh will retire and confine himself to the duties of his county office.

Mr. White, the contractor for the construction of the bridge across the Red Lake River near its mouth, has sub-contracted with the man who built the bridge above Crookston, for the completion of his contract.

The milling business of the valley has not ground out great wealth to the investors in that kind of property during the past winter. Our mill has shut down, not from want of business, but because there was no money for the labor.

Owing to some misunderstanding in the limitations of a druggist's license on the part of the village authorities, or by Mr. A. C. Clausen, the latter was arraigned before Squire Russell for selling liquors without a village permit. The trouble has been amicably adjusted.

One day this week, Ole Danelson, Aghnus, a young Norwegian four miles south of town, took an over dose of boose, and fell in with one of our fighting townsmen likewise saturated, bearing the champion's name of Sullivan. The latter, in the past, has had numerous tilts with the Norsk family, and at times comes out second best. From some cause an altercation followed, when Pete Sullivan followed Danelson and struck him a blow with a piece of hard wood, nearly fracturing Ole's skull. Sullivan was bound over to appear before the district court.

POLK COUNTY.

Minnesota Farmer.

Is 24 miles north and south and 60 miles from east to west. It is in the third tier of counties from the north boundary, and fronts westwardly on the Red River of the North. It contains 1,123 960 acres, there being 49 townships in the county. There are 3,000 voters, and an estimated population of 15,000. There is a bonded indebtedness of only $60,000. There are 3 flouring mills, 4 feed mills, 4 saw mills, 16 churches, 8 newspapers and 50 school houses.

CROP REPORTS.

Mr. Geo. Roberts came in the spring of '79, and this year sowed 350 acres of wheat and averaged 16 bushels to the acre.

L. Freeman has 360 acres of wheat that averaged 21 bushels to the acre; he had 15 acres of timothy that produced 2 tons to the acre.

F. S. De Mers dug from 2 acres planted to potatoes and sold $250 above the expense of seed and planting; besides this he put something like 100 bushels into the cellar and supplied 10 men thus far at his brick yard boarding house, and paid 80 bushels to the party who dug them.

Mr. Merrill's wheat averaged 17 bushels to the acre.

Mr. L. C. McKnight's wheat went 21 bushels to the acre.

Mr. W. W. Cornnell owns 2500 acres 6 miles north of Fisher. 250 acres was sown to wheat yielding an average of 24 bushels. He had in all 500 acres in wheat, but the balance, owing to the rain fall, did not yield as well. He also had 300 acres of oats. This season he will sow 1400 acres of grain. He has the finest barn we have seen in the Northwest, 110x25 feet, with an addition of 88x36 feet for horses; it has 2 lofts, and is a model for convenience.

Roberts, Colter & Co., have 2500 acres near Mr. Connell, and have 25 head of fine Jersey cattle. They are turning their attention largely towards stock raising.

We are informed that the tenants on Mr. Freeman's farm planted 4 acres of potatoes that yielded 300 bushels to the acre. Mr. Freeman dug from one-half an acre 150 bushels. His oats yielded 50 bushels to the acre.

The 450 acres owned by Messrs. De-Mers & Thompson produced an average of 18 bushels No. 1 wheat; while the 300 acres sown by Mr. De Mers yielded an average of 17 bushels wheat.

Mr. C. B. Rockwood has 1000 acres of land 8 miles from Fisher; 150 were sown to wheat that yielded 12½ bushels. From 80 acres of oats he threshed an average of 26 bushels. He has 650 acres broken for this season.

The Keystone Farm of 2000 acres, produced the same average of wheat.

Minnesota Tribune: Mr Robert Fairweather called yesterday at the emigration department of the Manitoba road, and left last night for his home in Euclid, Polk County. He is one of the leading farmers of the Red River Valley, and has just returned from Glasgow, where he has recently been on a visit to friends and from whence he brings his father and family, and they too are to locate near him. A large number of other well-to-do Scotch farmers will follow later in the spring, and Mr. Fairweather is authorized to locate lands for others who will shortly follow. Besides these a number of farmer's sons are to come over to learn the style of farming in vogue in the Red River Valley, preparatory to engaging in that business for themselves. Mr. Fairweather was a passenger on board the White Star steamer Republic, and was an eye-witness to the rescue of the survivors of the ill-fated steamer Glenmorgan, when every person on the wreck was taken on board in safety, and he speaks in the highest terms of the bravery displayed by the officers and crew of the Republic.

FARM NOTES.

Minnesota Tribune.

BETTER FARMING.

It is often said that this is an age of improvement, and so it is; and it is a gratifying fact that while there is so much progress in everything else, the farmers are steadily in the advance line of progress—thus proving that agriculture, the first of arts, thrives only in the vicinage and by the co-operation of other departments of productive industry. Now that farmers are surrounded by producers who are not farmers, who buy and consume the products of the farm, and with an increasing demand for everything raised on the farm, it has become necessary, in order to supply this class of people and the rest of the world with bread, to observe every law of progress incident to the ingenuity of man. Perhaps, had it not been for railroads and the building up all over the country of every kind of manufacturing, mechanical and mineral productions, the farmers would not have been so progressive as they are at this time. Their utmost capacity would not perhaps, have been required, but as it is, only the better class of farming pays, and as a consequence, we have better farming now than at any previous period. It is not only so on this continent, but in Europe and in other agricultural lands, and so long as the benign policy is observed which steadily seeks to diversify the industries of all countries by fostering and building up other productions than those of the farm, the farmers may expect a rich reward for their labor. So great, said Horace Greeley at one time, is the average bulk and weight of his products, and perishable are most of them that they must be readily exchanged or they have little or no value. Since the introduction of so many railroads, mills, factories and enterprises of every description in almost every agricultural country all products of the farm are readily sold or exchanged right at the threshold of the farmer's door. The old system of farming has passed away. It is well that it has, because there would have been a good many people suffering for the want of bread, had it been handed down to this generation.

MULES ON A FARM.

It has always been a mystery to us that farmers throughout the West have such a repugnance to working mules on the farm. They do not require half of the care that horses do, and can do as much work with half of the food required for horses, to keep them in good condition. They are as kind and gentle as horses, the viciousness that they were so fully possessed of a score or two years ago has disappeared. This can be accounted for by the breeding from American instead of Spanish jacks, and from the kind treatment they receive instead of the kicks and abuse which they were subject to when they were not nearly as plenty and popular as they are now. We know of a large farmer who has several teams about equally divided between horses and mules. He informs us that the mules are so much cheaper than the horses, that he will sell all of the latter except one span, which he will retain for road purposes. He considers the work of the mule quite as valuable as that of horses, and they are not as liable to accidents and sickness. They are more hardy and are capable of enduring a great deal more fatigue, and when well broke to the harness, they are as true as horses, hardly ever balking. When we consider that the high price that oats, corn and other food that is necessarily consumed by horses, so that they can be kept in good working order, we cannot help thinking that it is much more economical to retain mules than farm horses. At least it would be a good plan for every farmer to keep one span of good mules to help out with the work.

THE NEW LAW FOR DITCHES AND DRAINS.

Fisher Bulletin.

The bill in regard to ditches and drains, introduced into the House of Representatives, by Marcus Johnson on Jan. 17th, 1883, has become a law. As it is a law of great importance, we give a short synopsis of its provisions. It authorizes the Board of County Commissioners of any county, when it shall be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare, to cause to be constructed, as in said bill provided, any ditch, drain or water course within said county. In order to establish any ditches, under this act, it is necessary that a petition signed by one or more land owners, whose lands will be effected by the construction of the same, to file a petition with the auditor of such county, setting forth the beginning, route and terminus thereof; and such petition shall also give a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned to pay all expenses incurred in case the commissioners fail to establish such ditch or water course. Upon the filing of such bond and petition, the commissioners shall, if in session, appoint three disinterested parties as viewers to examine into the necessity, practicability and benefits of such ditch. These views shall, with the assistance of a civil engineer, make a survey of the proposed route for such ditch and estimate the expense of the same. If in their opinion it will be of sufficient public benefit to authorize its construction, they shall survey a route for the same coinciding, as nearly as possible, with the route described in the petition, but may vary it when necessary. They shall also assess the expense for constructing such ditch to the lands to be benefited, in proportion to the amount of benefit to be received by such land; such land of equal force and vitality as a tax assessed against the same. The act also provides for the appointment of reviewers of said proposed ditch, to review and reconsider the work, upon the filing of a proper bond; if no change is made the person or persons applying for such review shall pay all costs of the same; but if a material change is made the expense shall be assessed with the rest against the land to be benefited. If upon the filing of any petition, as above stated, the reviewers, report unfavorably to the construction of any such ditch, the petitioners must pay all expenses incurred. Any person or corporation feeling agrieved by any final orders of the board of county commissioners in regard to laying out any such ditch or to the assessment of damages of the same, may appeal from such order to the district court. The above is a very brief outline of the new law. Under it ditches may be constructed, where necessary, and the expense equitably divided among those benefited in proportion to the amount of benefit received; and where ditches are constructed in the vicinity of railroad lands, the railroad companies must bear their proportion of the expense. The act is very comprehensive and provides throughly against any abuse, of the powers granted under it; these very provisions make proceedings under it somewhat laborous, and perhaps expensive; but, on the whole, it is an equitable law and of incstimable benefit to the public.

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON, THURSDAY, MARCH 8.

Tuesday reminded us very much of last winter.

Hon. H. Steenerson arrived from St. Paul on Sunday.

Judge Reynolds has returned from his sojourn at St. Paul.

Miss Helen McDonald, of Ada, is visiting in the family of her brother Dan Mconald.

A. J. Clark, of the Argyle Banner, arrived from St. Paul on Tuesday stopping over one train.

Every body talks of high water this spring. We trust that every body will be agreeably disappointed.

Mr, S. Rosenthal is away after more goods. When he returns look out for a fine new stock at the C. O. D.

A slight accident happened to the Grand Forks train on Monday, caused by a broken rail. As usual nobody hurt.

E. A. Ranson and C. A. Seabury expect to get into their new drug store at St. Hilaire about April 1st. Mr. Ranson informs us that he expected work to commence on the building on Tuesday.

Theo. Holton, of Lake Park, Becker County, was in the city on Wednesday calling on old friends. He is on his way to his new home at Larimore where he intends to engage in the machine business.

Mr. C. B. Palmers informed us before he left that he was quite confident of being able to secure a paper mill for Crookston ere his return. A dozen mills could find plenty of work and a good market.

From Andrew Steenerson we learn that only the tips of Chris' fingers had to be taken off which corrects the impression that had obtained that he had lost all of the fingers of his left hand entire.

The Red Lake Falls Era is enlarged and appears under change of name. It is now a good local paper and, under the management of F J. Rothpletz will doubtless accomplish much good for that section of country.

Caspar Sands, well-known to most of our citizens as the popular conductor who used to run between Fergus and St. Vincent, is now running between Fergus and Grand Forks. Caspar is one of the oldest and best conductors on the line.

E. K. Overland, of Garfield, came in on Monday and on Tuesday he was seen examining farming implement allee samee granger man. It looks like Overland contemplates going into No. 1 Hard next summer. Well, he eminently deserves success.

The Linton House was formally opened to the public on Tuesday by a big dinner that was heartily enjoyed by a large number of invited guests from the city. The JOURNAL man was included in the invitations but was disappointed in not being able to get there

Mr. C. B. Palmer left for his old home at Tonica, Ill., on Wednesday to be gone a month. Since he has been here he has made large investments for himself and has invested over $20,000 in city property for his friends. He has large faith in the future of this city and country.

Frank Jerome started on Monday evening for St. Paul and below on a trip combining business with pleasure. He expects to return about March 18th with a lot of cows, oxen, beef cattle and, perhaps, horses. Look out for his return, if you want to purchase as he never deals in any but the best stock.

Charlie Johnson, the booming real estate man of St. Hilaire was in the city this week. He reports times livening up there and expects to see a big rush this spring. St Hilaire now boasts of a bank and a large hotel 25x150 feet wherein they expect to pack the bonanza hunters as thick as a bunch of swarming bees.

A delay of seven or eight hours occurred to Friday's train owing to the train getting off the track near Manston. Nobody hurt. The little flurry of Tuesday also delayed the trains several hours. So far this winter we have been very fortunate in that respect the trains arriving almost invariably on time during the whole winter.

Hon. B. Sampson returned last Saturday from St. Paul. He says that work on the mill will continue right along. The timbers are being delivered and we expect ere long to see the frame work begin to loom up. Mr. Sampson is confident that he will not only secure the flouring mill but a paper mill also before next fall. This would prove a valuable acquisition to our city and county.

If the weather prophet, Wiggins, lieth not we are to catch thunder and lightning wind and rain and divers dire calamities from to morrow until Sunday night. We have concluded to go out upon the prairie and climb a tree the better to be enabled to see how the old thing pans out anyhow and then we shall have a tall old item for next issue. Meanwhile, if our readers will keep well under cover we will tell 'em all about how 'tis.

Mr. C. C. Utzinger has sold out to Beecher & George who will hereafter preside at Medical Hall. Mr. George is well known having been in the employ of Mr. U. since that gentleman has been the drug business and needs no one to vouch for him as he has proved equal to the emergency and shown that he is a No. 1 druggist by his works. Mr. Beecher is a New Yorker and—of course—is A. No. 1. The new firm are both experienced and will no doubt do well. While we regret to see Mr. U. go out we are glad to know that his successors are every way well qualified to take his place.

The Old Folks Concert, on Thursday evening last was a decided success in everything except receipts. The net receipts were only $25 and the entertainment furnished was well deserving of three times that amount. Every-body seemed well pleased and well they might for the parts were sustained in a manner that reflected great credit upon the ladies and gentlemen who furnished the treat and especially does Prof. Dusso deserve commendation for the faithful manner in which he performed his arduous tasks and his ability as a manager and singer. The meekness which sot upon the placid countenance of the sedate register when he responded to the "call John" proclaimed him an actor of no mean ability and the make up of the entire party provoked smiles numerous and often. The entertainment is well worthy of a repetition.

Wheat, No. 1 Hard 93, No. 2 88. Oats 40 to 45 cents.

Judge F. Ives has returned from his southern trip very much improved in health.

G. M. Barber, of G. M. Barber & Co., was rusticating in Grand Forks this week.

H. Steege is putting [illegible] a store house for his meats, adjoining his meat market on the north.

Call at Charlie Seely's quiet retreat, on Second Street when you wish a good cigar or a bit of liquid refreshment.

The ladies of the M. E. church will give a basket sociable in the church on Wednesday evening next, 14th inst.

Louis Fried arrived on Monday with a carload of heavy draught horses. Call and examine them at Steege's Stables, Main Street.

Mr. Wm. Gilbert, of Warren, was in the city visiting his friends during the latter part of last week. He has just returned from a visit below.

The M. E. church quarterly meeting will be held next Sunday. Rev. G. R. Hair Presiding Elder will be in attendance, Services at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Dan. McKinnon, successor to Chas Roidbeche intends soon to fix up the restaurant in fine style with paint and paper. He is having a good business and well deserves it as he evidently knows how to run a first-class restaurant.

Mr. D. Bain one of the large hearted farmers of the Marais, gave us a call on Friday last. He reports much wheat in sight in that locality and says that farmers will sow larger quantities the coming season. Business flourishing every body happy.

The term of Prof. Dusso's class in vocal music closed Monday evening. He will give six lessons more and then give a "young people's concert." Any who wish to become members of the class should be at Lawrence Hall Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Books are furnished free of charge and tuition only one dollar.

Minneapolis Journal: Hon. G. G Hartley, of Brainard, is to be married on Wednesday, to Miss Carrie Woodward, of Minneapolis.—Speaker Fletcher and wife will leave on Wednesday for the Hot Springs. Mr. F. will return in two or three weeks, but his wife will make an extended stay there.

Andrew Steenerson returned from Grand Forks on Saturday having made arrangements to handle the J. I. Case Thresher in Polk Co. This threshing machine is said to be the best machine in the market and our farmers should listen to Andrew's gentle music when he sings of the threshing machine.

Gardner Stevens who went to Miles City, Montana, with Charles Hamilton, is in Minneapolis. He does not like that far western country as well as he likes the Red River Valley country. He says that his last report from Charles Hamilton stated that he was very sick in New York City—not expected to live.

R. W. Ranney quit working at the well on the JOURNAL farm on Monday, pronouncing it finished. The huge bore is over 200 feet deep and a fine stream of pure, cold, soft water is now continually running rejoicing the hearts of all interested parties. We are convinced that flowing wells are easily obtained and are the thing for this country.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the new advertisement of Beecher & George, at Medical Hall. This is a new firm in our city Mr. D. H. Beecher being a new comer among us and Mr. C. H. George a recent arrival from Minneapolis, coming when Mr. Utzinger first bought Medical Hall to take charge of the store. He is a druggest of long experience and is well and favorably known in our city. Mr. Beecher is from Binghampton, New York and comes to us well recommended and as he seems possessed of the true metal for a western man he will doubtless do well here. Success to the new firm.

At the meeting of the board of supervisors of the town of Fairfax held March 6th, the board made the following proposition to the voters of the town. We the supervisors do recomend that the town of Fairfax issue bonds to the amount of $5,000 or more, said bonds to run not less than ten nor more than twenty years to grade roads and build bridges in said town. The amount of bonds so issued to be expended in the town at the discretion of the supervisors.

St. Patrick's Day.

A Grand Ball will be given at Ericsson's Hall on the evening of St. Patrick's Day, March 17th 1883. Good music and a good time. All are cordially invited.

To Everybody and their Friends.

We have purchased the old and well-known drug store popularly known as "Medical Hall," corner of Broadway and Second Street, and it will be our aim to preserve the reputation already established, and by a proper appreciation of the wants of the Red River Valley to greatly enlarge on the amounts of business being done.

Yours respectfully,
BEECHER & GEORGE.

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family. In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

PROCTOR KNOTT TELLS A STORY.

The Congressman is Interviewed by a Vermonter.

Correspondence New York Tribune.

Proctor Kott, who has the reputation of being the best story-teller in Kentucky, where most of the best story-tellers live, gave an account of an interview with a certain Mr. Watkins, of Vermont, which he told with a skill of facial expression that would have made his fortune on the stage. The rules about admission to the floor of the house are very strict, and a conversation with a member can only be had by an outsider by sending in a card through the doorkeeper, when the member emerges, hurries through the talk, and goes in again. As members are usually pretty well occupied, it is expected that these interviews shall be as brief as possible. One day Mr. Knott received the card of Mr. Watkins, of Vermont, whom he did not know. He went out, met a long, lean man with a solemn countenance, and this conversation followed:

"Be you Mr. Knott, the funny man?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Knott, promptly; "and I'm a great deal funnier than you'd suppose. The fact is that I don't dare to be as funny as I can be. I've already sacrificed the lives of several of my friends through a reckless exercise of my humorous powers, and I go about under a constant sense of self-restraint."

"Be you from the Blue-glass region or the Pennyryal?"

"I'm from the Pennyryal." Here Mr. Knott began to be a little uneasy. They were just beginning a roll-call in the house. Mr. Watkins shifted to his other foot and began again: "What kind of cattle do they have down in Kentucky?"

"Well, we still have a very fine breed of the megatheoium there. But the pleiosaurus and the icthyosaurus, I'm sorry to say, are rapidly dying out. It will be a great loss to the state, because they are very tame and have been used a great deal for domestic purposes. A good many of the ladies make pets of them."

Mr. Watkins seemed a little surprised, but he got on the other foot and changed the subject.

"Do you know Mary Anderson?"

"Oh, very well."

"Is she pretty?"

"Ravishingly beautiful."

Mr Watkins paused a moment. Mr. Knott could hear the roll call traveling rapidly toward the Ks. "Did you ever see her play in Romeo and Juliet?"

"Oh, frequently."

"Do you think 'Romeo and Juliet' is the best play Shakespeare ever wrote?"

"Well now, my friend, you'll have to excuse me from expressing an opinion on that point. You see, I'm coming up for re-election, and feeling is running pretty high in my district now on that very question. About half of my constituents say that 'Romeo and Juliet' is the best play Shakespeare ever wrote, and about half of them swear it isn't. So you see if I should commit myself, it would damage me very much in the campaign."

"Oh," said Mr. Watkins. Then he pulled out of his pocket a little Connecticut watch, about the size of a quarter dollar. "Do they sell many of them down in Kentucky?"

"Well, I've forgotten the price per peck," said Mr. Knott; "they're usually sold by the peck. They don't often sell a bushel at a time."

Mr. Watkins was surprised but he didn't go away. He only changed to the other foot. Meanwhile the reading clerk inside the hall had begun on the Ks. "Say, I see in the Trybune that it took a regiment of men and two cannon to hang a man down in Kentucky. Now, I want to know if that's so?"

"No, sir, it is not. The Trybune is a most untrustworthy newspaper. The truth is this: We know it has been said lately in the north that we couldn't hang a man for murder in Kentucky, and so we made up our minds that we must have a hanging for the benefit of the state. There was a trial ended just then, and we agreed that the fact that the jury had acquitted the man couldn't be allowed to interfere. To be sure, he was innocent—it was a perfectly clear case,—but the honor of Kentucky was at stake, and what could we do? We hanged him, sir, but it took a whole brigade of soldiers and a park of artillery to do it. That shows you just how near that Try-bune comes to the facts."

"Say there's another thing I wanted to see you about; I've heard that people down your way chew and smoke during meeting. That aint so is it?"

Mr. Knott was angry at last. "No, sir, it's an infamous falsehood. It's true that the boys usually have a poker deck in their pockets, and if the service is a little long, they get down between the pews and have a little game, and open a bottle of whiskey. But the statement, sir, that they chew tobacco during church services is a miserable lie of the Yankee press."

Mr. Watkins seemed satisfied with this assurance. He stood still a moment "Well I thought I'd like to make your acquaintance, Mr. Knott," and he went away, and the Kentucky member fled into the hall in time to be counted among the stragglers on the roll call. He offered to prove by "Joe" Blackburn that this entire conversation actually took place, but the company preferred to take the story without any security.

Mr. F. L. Ceney, of Madison, Ind., writes: "I was completely broken up with rheumatism, and was also suffering from indigestion and piles. My aunt, Mrs. Whalen, living in Louisville, wrote, advising me to try Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. I did so. I also bathed my joints with vinegar and salt. This treatment relieved me of all suffering."

The Tramp and the Dog.

From the Detroit Free Press.

A big, lonesome-looking dog sat at the gate of a house on Cass avenue yesterday, eyes full of tears and his whole body shaking with cold. A tramp who had neither overcoat nor mittens, and whose bare toes peeped through his boots, was making his way up the street in search of the right kind of an entrance, when he espied the dog and crossed over and said: "Well now this is an unexpected pleasure. Upon my soul but I have found one living thing in this town as poorly off as myself. Say, old fellow, where do you hang out?" The dog looked at him through his tears, but had nothing to say. "Tough? isn't it?" continued the man. "I look old and seedy, and you are the homliest dog I ever saw. That strikes a fraternal chord, and we are on a level. I haven't had a square meal in a week, and you haven't seen a bone for the past ten days. Even again, eh? The dog shivered and whined, and got up and sat down, and the tramp drew closer and said: "No home, eh? Neither have I. No one to whistle for you? Same here. That's even again. I can warm up my shakes with whisky, while you have to grin and bear it. That's where I got the dead wood on you. I can talk through my nose and tell fifty different stories to excite sympathy and bring out cold victuals, while you have nothing to say for yourself, and must take bones are go hungry. That's another for me. On the whole I'm ahead of you, and, although you are only a dog, I'm glad on it. It's something to feel that you are one peg higher than an old yellow cur. So long, old fellow." As the tramp started to go, the dog reached out and snapped his leg, and then took a run for it. "Say, there, hold on!" called out the man, as he wheeled around. "I said I was ahead, but I'll take it back! You can lunch on my legs, while I'll see this country teetotally busted to New Jersey, if I don't die of starvation before I come down to eating dog! Even, old fellow—just about even on the average, and no use of any hard feelings over it."

A Woman in Camp.

No man of us who was there can ever forget the afternoon a party of hunters and Indian fighters rode to our mining camp with a lone woman in their midst.

It had been twenty-two months since any of us had seen anything more resembling a woman than a pair of spectacles and a red cotton handkerchief, and to say that we were knocked down, stepped on and crushed into the hard soil with astonishment is saying little enough.

The woman was a widow who had been captured by the Indians from an immigrant train and then recaptured by the hunters. She was about 40 years of age, had taken the situation coolly, and instead of making an effort to restore herself to the train and to her relatives with whom she was journeying, had asked to be set down in our camp until she could make up her mind what course to pursue. This was the way the leader of the hunters turned her over to our are:

"Say you diggers arter silver, here's a woman who wants to stop here fur a spell till she gets rested! She's educated and she sings like a wind blowing over prairie flowers."

And this was the way we received her.

"Ahem—yes—ahem—jess so—yes—hats off, boys—no swearing—glad to see ye—hope yer well—ahem—exactly?"

There were thirty of us standing around there, mouths open, hats off, knees wobbling, and more coming up from the diggings every minute, and something in the situation made the widow grin as she looked us over. I file my claims as follows:

1. I assisted her off the horse.

2. I said I hoped she was well.

3. I remarked that it was a melodious afternoon.

She accepted my arm as we walked to camp, and then accepted my shanty as her headquarters.

If a tidal wave six feet high had come rolling up the valley it wouldn't have produced half the flutter occasioned by the presence of Widow Flemming. There were eighty or ninety of us, rough, brawny, and more or less wicked, some married, some divorced and some old bachelors, and to have a dumpy little black-eyed widow with a pretty mouth and a voice as sweet as sixty-cent molasses pop in upon us at three o'clock in the afternoon was excuse enough to stop work and send the query up and down the lines:

"Well, isn't this the next thing to the judgment day?"

Several curious things happened right away. Col. Taylor who had never been known to wash his face or comb his hair started out in search of a clean shirt and a pocket-comb, and offered up as high as $15 without being able to secure them. He then made a beeline for the creek, washed the only shirt he was ever known to have, combed his hair with a stick, and in half an hour was back in camp and waiting an introduction to the widow.

Bill Goodhen, the ugliest looking man in camp, offered $5 for a piece of looking-glass two inches square, and not being able to find one he went and washed his feet as the next best thing.

There was a general washing up and combing and scrubbing and hunting out clean shirts and neckties, and the old man Payson, who had been sick in bed for a week, got up and began to chew tobacco and call for his clothes, and he observed:

"Gentlemen, who knows but what this widder heard that I had $60 saved up and she has come here to ask for my hand in marriage?"

I have further claims to file, as follows:

5. I was chosen guardian to the widow by a unanimous vote.

6. The widow seemed perfectly satisfied with the choice.

7. I had the only clean white shirt in that whole camp, and only five buttons were missing from the garment.

Other claims were intrusted to me to as follows:

Seven different men had their hair cut.

Six others shaved themselves with jack knives.

Over a dozen of our band let up a notch or two on swearing, except when on the other side of the camp.

Well, it was curious what a change that widow wrought in our camp, in our way of living, and upon the manner of the men. Each one made an effort to clean and slick up, and in most cases with marked success. Before her advent we could acount on two or three quarrels per day. After her coming such a thing was never known. Indeed, one day when Peter White so far forgot himself as to insult Charles O'Gay, Charles took him aside and whispered.

"Peter, I kin turn ye wrong side out in six ticks of a clock, but I'm not the sort of a gentleman to kick up a row and upset a lady's nerves. I'll lay it up agin ye, and arter she leaves camp I'll wallop ye or die trying."

And the widow, she sewed on buttons and mended rent garments for the whole of us, and she taught this one how to cook, and that one how to patch and darn, and before we knew it she was a god-mother and an idol. A queen could not have demanded deeper respect, nor an angel greater reverence.

She was with us about six weeks, and then went away with friends who came for her. Each man was taken by the hand and given a good-bye word, and as she was lost to sight down the trail the awful silence among our crowd was broken by the thundering report of the Judge blowing his nose, followed by the husky observation:

"Well, I swan! Hanged if I've felt so much like crying in about forty-seven years!"

A Mountain Spectre.

From the Virginia City Enterprise.

The famous spectre of the Brocken which frequently appears in the Hartz Mountains seldom visits this country, but it was seen not long ago from the Toujabe range, in Nevada, by K. A. Marr, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, who gives this account of the atmospheric phenomenon: "Suddenly, as I stood looking over the vast expanse beneath me, I saw myself confronted by a monster figure of a man standing in mid air before me, upon the top of a clearly-defined mountain peak, which had but the thin air of the valley below for resting place. The figure was only a short distance from me. Around it were two circles of rainbow light and color, the outer one faintly defined as compared with the inner one, which was bright and clear and distinctly iridescent. Around the head of the figure was a beautiful halo of light, and from the figure itself shot rays of colors nominal to the body.

"The sight startled me more than I can now tell. I threw up my hands in astonishment and perhaps some little fear, and at this moment the spectre seemed to move toward me. In a few minutes I got over my fright and then, after the figure had faded away, I recognized the fact I had enjoyed one of the most wonderful phenomena of nature. Since then we have seen it once or twice from Jeff Davis Peak, but it has never created such an impression upon me as it did that evening when I was doing service as a heliotroper, all alone on top of Aro Dome."

Things in General.

A remarkable thief has been caught in Chicago. He is young, handsome, well educated, very gentlemanly, and wonderfully audacious. He lived several months at the largest hotels, dressed in such an extreme of the fashion as to attract attention, and paid his bills promptly; and all the money was obtained by sneak thieving in the rooms of fellow guests. In one instance he took a bag containing negotiable bonds worth $3,000. When caught at last by a watchman, he drew a pistol and attempted to escape by murder.

Among the curiosties of Southern California is a camelia growing in the garden of Col. Bond of Santa Barbara. This plant measures over six feet in height and about the same number in breadth, and has on it, during its season of bloom, over three thousand flowers.

There are some dispensations of a beneficent nature which are not easily comprehended by the casual inquirer, and do not become very much plainer when carefully examined. One of them was remarked upon the other day by a young lady. "It is very curious," she observed, "although unaccountable, indeed, that the tortoise, from whom we get all our tortoise-shell combs, has himself no hair whatever."

A Bermuda correspondent of the Times describes the island as a paradise of indolence. There is no extreme poverty, and it is easy enough for anybody to live who has energy enough to work one day out of six. In the year 1881 from the cultivation of only 2,000 acres, there £560 worth of arrow root, £25,572 of potatoes, £52,925 of onions, £5,890 of tomatoes, and £259 of beets, a total of £85,206, or about $500,000, and average of $250 to the acre. What a glorious country this would be for an overworked Washington Government official.

As illustrative of the ramifications of the nihilist conspiracy in Russia, it is related that the governor of Volhynia received a letter threatening him with death unless he forwarded 3000 rubles to a place named by a certain day. A trustworthy person was sent to the appointed spot, which was carefully watched by a strong body of subordinate officials. At midnight the mysterious author of the letter made his appearance to receive the money, and was recognized by the watchers to their utter bewilderment, as the chief of police. He was instantly arrested. On examination it was found that his writing corresponded with that of many threatening letters received by persons occupying high social and official positions in the district.

There are about 20,000 working men in Boston whose average pay is our dollars a week, and whose board costs them an average of three dollars and fifty cents a week. This leaves them twenty-six dollars a year for clothing and incidentials.

Among the trees which grow in Alaska is one called yellow cedar, which has a fragrance somewhat like that of sandal wood and nearly as marked. It is a grainless wood of straw color, and the Russians built many ships of it, for which purpose it is admirably adapted.

Louisville, Ky., is busily making preparations for a grand industrial exhibition next August. The citizens have subscribed $250,000, ask for no outside help, and are putting up the main building, which will cover thirteen acres. The show will open August 1, and continue one hundred days.

Senator Frye's assertion in the senate that sugar cost many families, even of the poorer classes, more than flour attracts much attention. He learns from the keepers of eight boarding-houses in Lewiston, Me., that they pay $905 a year for sugar and molasses, and $834 for flour.

The criminal folly of playing with fire-arms was freshly illustrated at Phœnixville, Pa., the other evening. There was a party of young people at the house of Matthew Hartigan. He called his wife, told her he was going to fire his gun through the window to frighten the visitors, and that she should not be frightened. He said the gun was loaded with a marble. He fired, and a little girl, daughter of one of his neighbors, coming into the yard at that instant, was shot dead.

BISMARCK A GOOD FRIEND.

Incidents of the Potsdam Battalion Which Tried Wit and Friendship.

From the Paris Register.

A good Bismarck anecdote, showing the Prince to have been a good comrade from his youth up, is the following: "In 1838 he entered the Potsdam Battalion of "Garde Jaeger" as a one year old volunteer, and six months later, at his request he was transferred in the "Second Jaegers" at Greifwald, in order to profit by the lectures in the Agricultural School of Eldena. One of his comrades in the battalion was a young man, who at the present day is still counted among the great landed proprietors of the Province of Pomerania. He then stood in the second rank immediately behind Bismarck.

"In spite of stringent orders to the contrary, the Jaegers persisted in frequently firing a shot at the numerous storks on the meadows near Greifswald while out on a march, drilling or exercising. One day on the march home to the barracks Bismarck's hind man brought down a bird with a bullet. The officers, although marching a good way ahead, heard the report, saw the stork falling down, ordered the battalion to halt, and forthwith began to examine the guns. Everything was as it should be in the first rank. The culprit in the second act began to tremble all the more for his safety, inasmuch as his promotion to a lieutenancy was at stake in case he should be found out. This Bismarck realized, and while his friend was on the point of voluntarily denouncing himself, in order to clear the rest of the men from an unjust suspicion, he whispered to him: 'Look sharp; take your gun in the left arm; I'll throw you mine.' No sooner said than done, so swiftly in fact that the inspecting officer did not notice it, and the case of the killed stork remained an unexplained mystery. Over a mug of beer that night Private Bismarck declined to receive the thanks of his comrade for a service 'which was not worth talking about.' To this day, the two are pleasant neighbors and sworn friends."

A Rich and Generous Editor.

The New York Herald calls for relief for the sufferers by the western floods, and heads its subscription list with a contribution of $5,000. The New York Morning Journal, referring to the fact, pays the editor of the Herald the following merited tribute:

"Mr. James Gordon Bennett has done many generous acts before this. His princely donation of $200,000 to the Irish famine fund; his large expenditure on soup houses when want prevailed among the poor of New York during the unusually severe winter; his gift to the sufferers by the Chicago fire, and his subscription to the yellow fever fund, are only a few instances of his sympathy with human suffering."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. "Henry Morton, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. "S. Dana Hayes, State Assayer, Mass."

"June 23, 1883.—We have made a careful analytical test of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by ourselves in the open market here, and in the original package. We find it to be a cream of tartar powder of the highest degree of strength, containing nothing but pure, wholesome, and useful ingredients.

"Juan H. Wright, M.D.,
"Albert Merrell, M.D., } Analytical Chemists, St. Louis."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

Note.—The above Diagram illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A one pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than the ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

A young man in Logan county, Kentucky, named Sam Gladwell, was kicked in the face by a wild horse some time since, and died from the effects of the injury last week. The scar on his forehead where the horse's hoof struck was not as large as a nickle, and he was conscious up to the time of his death.

The Rev. George H. Austin was not paid his salary regularly at Madison, Ind., and in order to raise money he forged the name of a rich member of his church to a check, trusting to the man's forgiveness for protection from exposure and punishment; but he was promptly sent to prison for five years. The life of a convict soon broke down his mind and body, and he died at the end of eighteen months.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press thus describes the new Colorado senator. Mr. Bowen is, or was two years ago, a thin, dark man, rather tall, of nervous temperment, eyes small, black, deep set and close together, prominent nose, resolute mouth, a set-off to the quick moving, suspicious eyes, black moustache, scant like a Chinaman's, straight black hair like an Indian's, no superfluous flesh on his bones, in movement quick, in dress plain, affecting black.

The Evangelist Moody has always had a great aversion to sitting for his photograph. A few weeks ago an English photographer succeeded in taking a picture of him, but the printing was limited to a few copies, to be distributed among a select list of friends. This is the first time in twenty-five years that Moody has faced a photographic camera. Now he has bought the negative in order to prevent the multiplication of the portrait.

While Colonel Ochiltree, Representative-elect from Texas, was Marshal of Texas he became through a technicality, short in his accounts, with the government about $8,000. Two judgments representing that amount remains against him on the books of the Treasury. A few days ago he offered to compromise with the Government by paying $500, claiming that poverty would prevent him paying the entire amount. The Solicitor of the Treasury has not yet decided to except the offer. Judge Lawrence, First Comptroller, says that so long as the judgment remains against him he cannot draw his salary.

For at least ten years past, or ever since the close of the Franco-Prussian war, we have had reports almost every month from Berlin about Bismarck's ill health; and he has often terrified his friends by threatening to retire from public life on account of it. Within the past few months we have heard much of his dreadful anguish under neuralgia; and now it appears that the old emperor is troubled over the condition of his man of blood and iron. It really looks as though the maladies by which Bismarck has so long been afflicted were reaching a crisis, and what its result is to be, all the doctors of Germany cannot tell.

Stealing a Sermon.

One of the most aggravating of partical jokes was once played by one clergyman upon another. The joker was a professor in a theological seminary, but evidently a man whose memory was more active than his intellect. The one on whom he played the mean joke was a student in the seminary, who was an extraordinary preacher even then, and was afterwards known as the eloquent William Jay. The story runs as follows.

A chapel which had recently been built was to be dedicated, and Mr. Jay and the professor were chosen for that service.

On arriving at the town, on the afternoon of Saturday, the professor called upon Mr. Jay, and informed him that the arrangment was for the professor to preach in the morning and Mr. Jay in the afternoon.

"And now," said the professor," what text have you chosen?"

The young man gave the text.

"And your divisions, what are they?"

The student named the heads of his discourse.

"Captial!" said the professor. "And your illustrations?"

These were given, and pleased the professor exceedingly.

"Now," said he, "Mr. Jay, if your application is as good as all the rest, your sermon will be a brilliant success."

The "improvement" of the sermon was given, and the professor expressed himself delighted with the whole treatment of the subject.

The next morning, arriving early at the chapel, Mr. Jay saw his friend, the professor, ascending the pulpit stairs, in quite a pleasant frame of mind.

But it so happened that the professor was a man of corpulent figure; and the pulpit, shaped like a barrel, with a section of the circle for the door, proved to be too small for the preachers admission.

Try as he might, face foremost and sidewise, it was impossible for the fat professor to get through the door.

An obliging deacon, seeing the difficulty, obtained a step-ladder, placed it on the landing, and by this means the professor scaled the wall of the pulpit and got inside.

The professor, however, began the service and, to the great astonishment of Mr. Jay, not only read the text he had selected and expounded to the professor the day before, but delivered with wonderful accuracy Mr. Jay's sermon, —divisions, illustrations, application and all.

At the close of the service, the friendly deacon assisted the fat professor to get out of the pulpit in the same way he had helped him into it.

In the afternoon, Mr. Jay arose to announce his text' the professor being in the pew, while the young preacher occupied the pulpit. With that peculiar emphasis which no man could imitate, Mr. Jay read the words of John 10:1 "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber!"

"Did you know," said an Englishman to a Jew, "that they hang Jews and asses together in Portland?" "Indeed," replied the Jew. "Then it is fortunate that you and I are not there."

The Rev. Phillips Brooks is homesick in India. He writes to a Boston friend that the sun never warmed a dearer part of the earth's crust than America

AUNT PHILURA AT HOME.

I've been driv up awfully lately, and can hardly git time to write a word. John and me have our two minds made up that we will take a trip to Boston jest as soon as Molly's and Bob's schools are out; and, take it all round, what with the work I'm doin' about house, and the extra sewin' it makes, I'm kept on the go all the time. Such a time as I've had gettin' ready for our journey! I don't generally set much store by dress, but I don't generally go to Boston, either, and so I'm layin' out what might be thought an extravagant sum of money on clothes.

There was some dretful pretty seal brown alpaca for twenty-five cents a yard, that I sot out I'd have. It would have made up awful neat, but the children set out that want good enough for me! They talked John over on to their side, and before I knew it Molly had been to the store and got a full dress pattern of black cashmere, and John went too and paid for it. I laid out to cut and make it myself after a pattern I've had a great many years, but Molly she says one day:

"Ma, how are you going to have your new dress made?"

"Made?" said I. "Why, just like my striped one, I guess—a bas' waist and skirt. Mebbe I'll ruffle the skirt if the cloth holds out."

"Now, ma," says Molly in a real wheedling tone "git Miss Jones down here and have it made up in style."

I had got so beat out opposin' and arguin' with 'em that I told Molly to get what she was a mind to, even if it was pink silk to trim it with, and she went down to the corners and got two yards of silk, all sheeny, sorter. "More antique" Mis Jones said it was. but I told her I'd got some pieces upstairs that was a good deal more antique than that. And then, there being a large piece of cloth left, they thought I should have a wrap—Molly said at first I'd got to have a dollman, but I set my foot down on that. "A dollman said I, "I've got one real man and he's more'n I can manage a good share of the time—though he is a good man as men go—and as for gettin' a dollman at my time of life, that's too outlandish!"

But I had the worst time about a bunnit. Molly would go with me to the milliner's one Saturday, and John, says he:

"You hain't had a new bonnet for so long, Philura, I guess you better let me help pick it out."

"Anybody'd think you were used to pickin' of 'em out every day or two by your talk," says I, and then we went in. They were determined I should wear a little bit of a bunnit, but I stood firm and would have my ears covered up. Finally they found a black felt bunnit that was a sort of a cross between my choice and theirs. It set down to my head, felt comfortable and looked well, only it didn't cover my ears up, but Molly said I could do that with the wide ribbon she put on for strings.

And they set out again that I should have it trimmed with some color, and not a good healthy color either, like a bright blue or green, but that humbly shade of green or of a still humbler shade of faded-out dark red that she called "terry-cotty-red." Says I:

"You can't git none of your terry-cotty greens nor faded-out reds on to me. Ain't my face red enough now, I'd like to know, without settin' it off with, no such humbly colors. Them things may be all right for young girls with cheeks like roses and foreheads like a shell for color, but for an old woman who has baked and roasted her face over a hot cook stove for years, till it's about the color of a rare-done beef-steak, they ain't proper. You can trim up that bunnit with black velvet and a black plume and strings, or else I won't take it at all," and that settled it, and it come out quite a respectable bunnit, after all, though it ain't so big and roomy as I should like, but that's what comes of followin' the fashions so close.

But when we'd got it settled on what new clothes there was to be got, our troubles wasn't ended. The next week after I'd got my new bunnit, I hurried round the first of the week and got the washin' and ironin' and bakin' all done up, and was runnin' candles one day, awful busy, when there came a knock at the side door. As soon as I could wash and wipe my hands, I started to open it, but I hadn't got farther than the sitting room door when in walked a fattish kind of woman carryin' a sort of leather case in her hands. "How do you do, mam?" says she, talkin' as if her life depended on it, and never waiting for an answer. "Ain't it a nice day? How's your health? Are your folks well? I heard from a lady up the road that you were going to Boston. I have here, madam," and she begun to unroll the case; "a new style of corset that gives the most stylish air to the stoutest frame. This is the most remarkable corset ever produced in this age or any other. Why, it makes a stout person look slim as a girl and a slim one looks plump. If you was going on a journey, madam, I should advise you by all means to procure this corset. It has an electric spring in the back that will keep you warm in the coldest day and prevent you becoming overheated in a warm one. It has a set of galvanized iron springs in front that are so comfortable to wear that you will hate to take them off at night, while they add so much to the grace and dignity of the figure as to be almost indispensable to any female who has ever seen them. Just let me try one of them on you. Why, you've no idea how it will improve your figure! It will——"

But here I smelt my fat burnin' and beat a retreat for the kitchen, where she followed me! "It will impart a marvelous charm to your manner and you will be certain to be admired by everybody. You know men do so admire a good figure."

This madded me, and I broke in, "Men!" says I, "and I a married woman! What business have I goin' round incitin' the admiration of men? Haven't I a pardner that admires me just as much in an old loose calico sack as in a pair of corsets, electric spring, galvanized sheet iron, or whatever else they're made of? I don't wan't to hear no more such talk, and I won't neither."

She sees she'd gone a little too far, so she took another tack.

"Well, you wear corsets, of course. All ladies do. We sell——"

"No, marm, I don't wear corsets and never did. I put some on once and felt as tho' I was run into a plaster of Paris mold such as I've heard of people with spinal disease bein' run into."

"Oh! but these you should wear, they are so easy. You would'nt be without them a day if you knew how they would improve your figure."

"My figger," says I, "is just as the Lord made it and nature let it grow. As long as the Lord don't look at the shape of the body so much as he does at the shape of the soul, and I an' my pardner are satisfied with my figger, I guess it ain't anybody else's business."

The woman kinder laughed and said, in a good natured way, that she guessed she and I couldn't trade much, and she'd better go. But this wan't all. After dinner just as I'd got my dishes washed up and put away, and was gettin' my candle molds round agin' determined I'd finish runnin' them candles that day, I heard another knock. My fat was gettin' hot again, so I took the pan off the fire and set it on a chair to cool a minute, and wiped my hands, when in came a dretful spruce young feller, in the tightest pants I ever saw a man have on, and what Tom calls a Seymour coat. He was perfumed up with musk, awful strong. He skipped into the room in a genteel way, with a book in his hand, and says he, "My good woman, don't let me interrupt you a moment in your customary avocations, but I have here a work on "Social Etiquette," which shows one how to behave on all occasions and under all circumstances. If you'll excuse me, however, I will just set right down here and read you a few pages—" and before I could say a word he sot square down in that pan of hot tallow. I jumped to catch him out, but before I could git to him, he gave one long screech and rushed out of the house, drippin' tallow all over the floor and my new rag-carpet.

It was an awful cold day, and the minute he got out doors the tallow hardened, and as he run down the road he looked, for all the world, as though somebody had drawn a map of Europe on his or—maybe it was an oil paintin."

He didn't seem to remember that it wasn't etiquette, to run out of anybody's house without as much as sayin' "good bye," but if he had sot there long enough to consult his blood on that point, I think probable that he would have done different. Anyway, I don't blame him at all, and haven't been pestered with agents any since that time.—[Aunt Philura in Boston Times.

Foreign Miscellany.

Mr. Trevelyan has discovered that the people in the West of Ireland are living on sea weed rather than go to the work houses provided by the government. He held for a long time that they only pretended to be starving, but now it appears as though, unless relieved, they will carry the deception so far as really to die.

A unpopular English Judge, anxious to sit next a distinguished noble at dinner, privately put half a sovereign into the butler's hand in order to be seated properly. The butler returned it at once, saying. "Thank you: but His Grace has just given me a sovereign to place you at the other end of the room."

Montreal is supplying New England with bodies for dissection. The skeletons of 10,000 Canadians, supposing themselves to be quietly sleeping in British graves, will be considerably astonished when Gabriel starts them out from American soil.

An English physician cures stammering by causing his patients to keep the lungs well filled, to draw long and frequent breaths, speak loud and pause the moment they find embarassment in speech, taking a long breath before going on. His theory is that stammering is due to attempting to speak with empty lungs. In singing the lungs are kept inflated, hence it is that inveterate stammerers are sometimes compelled to sing whatever they wish to say.

M. Duclerc, lately premier of France, is an enthusiast on fruit and flower culture. His rose garden at Biarritz is one of the great sights of the place. He thinks that but for his hobby he would long ago have become a confirmed misanthrope. When worried with business or state affairs it has been his habit to go for a walk in a garden, or park, or flower market, after which he always returns home in capital spirits. When he was a young and poor man he cultivated a garden in a small way on the roof of a six-story house, and was so successful there as to win a medal at a flower show.

The condition of the people of Bengal has become so desperate that the British authorities fear a revolution. The policy of centralization in firmancial matters was long ago demonstrated to be a failure, and now it is admited that it has proved a failure in every other department. Therefore it has been decided by Lord Ripon, the Governor General, to try home rule as a substitute, in the hope of reconciling the population to British domination. It is a little singular that home rule should be voluntarily granted to India and refused to Ireland.

An English paper accounts for the large sale in America of cheap razors with which a man could no more shave himself than he could with a brick bat, by saying that they are used by the negroes in fighting. Every negro, it says, carries one, and when he finds himself hard pressed he whips out his razor and slices his opponent's face. They are also used according to the same authority, in cutting sugar cane. The acid of the cane destroys the razor it one day's use; it is then thrown away and a new one taken, which fully accounts for the enormous consumption.

A story is told of Justice Huddlestone, of London, a prominent English Judge illustrating his propensity for "tuft-hunting." Going out to dinner recently, he learned that a certain noble Duke was to be of the party. As he encountered the butler in the hall he slipped half a sovereign into his hand, saying: "I have a few special words to say to the Duke; contrive that I sit next to him." "Thank you," said the butler, "His Grace has just given me a sovereign to place you at the other end of the room." The Duke knew his man,

The new law courts of England continue to give trouble. Some few weeks ago her majesty's judges, her majesty's counsel learned in the law, and sundry of her majesty's lieges were nearly frozen to death in consequence of a little trick played by a ventilator. The latest freak in which the courts have participated was that the clock in front of the building showed a disposition to come down on the heads of the passers by. Policemen were stationed to warn strangers of the danger of passing underneath but instead of moving on they gathered opposite to await the catastrophe. With however, the subtle humor that characterizes every portion of the facetious edifice, the clock remained in statu quo.

A Gourmand's Free Dinner.

A good story is told of a notable gastronomic performance in a New York hotel. One day when Gottlieb Scherer, a noted gourmand of this city, was boasting of his ability to eat more at a meal than any other man alive, an acquaintance remarked that his was a poor talent any way, as it would never be the means of making or saving him a dollar. Gottlieb retaliated by offering to make a bet that his ability in the eating line would enable him to dine himself and three friends sumptuously and free of expense at any hotel where he was unknown. The bet was accepted, and Gottlieb and his friends went on to New York to decide the wager. On reaching Gotham the party proceeded to a well known up-town restaurant. Gottlieb's imposing appearance at once inspired the worthy caterer, and a dinner of four courses, comprising game and other delicacies only obtainable at that season of the year with great difficulty and at considerable expense, he thought that he was in the presence of a bon vivant, and assured his bulky customer that nothing should be wanting on his part to make the dinner a success.

"You gentlemen find the appetite," said the restaurateur, "and I will undertake that the dinner is a success." "All right, dinner at six, sharp," said Gottlieb as he and his friends were leaving. "Oh, by the by, landlord," he added, "my friends are by no means gluttons, but don't forget to put enough on the table for four hungry men." "Never fear," said mine host, "I don't starve my guests." "Well, all right, but if you don't give us a sufficiency of birds and terrapin to go round, I'll be hanged if I pay the bill." "If I don't, I won't ask you for a cent," said mine host, falling headlong into the skillfully-laid trap.

At six, to the minute, Gottlieb and his party were on hand. The soup made its appearance. It was a puree of peculiar kind, and, like the rest of the dinner, specially prepared. The tureen contained about three pints. "Bring me a two-quart basin, waiter," said Gottlieb. When the astonished man put the bowl before him, Scherer emptied the contents of the soup tureen into it and, to the horror of the waiter leisurely swallowed all of it. Then he drew a deep breath and inquired of the waiter, "Where is the soup of my friends? My portion was good, very good. I never let my guests take anything that I do not first taste to see that it is perfect of its kind. Now bring their portion; come, quick." The waiter hied him to the cook, whom he found discussing, with evident gusto, the teacupful or so that had remained in the bottom of the pot. Returning to Gottlieb's party he told them that every drop of the soup was gone. "What you call this a sufficiency for four hearty men?" said Scherer. "Bah! But come bring on the fish." Smelts, boned and stuffed with tiny crabs previously boiled in champagne, was the next epicurean dish included in the menue. Sixteen fish, four for each guest, lay temptingly arranged upon the dish as the knight of the napkin set it down in front of the founder of the feast. Gottlieb gravely shovelled the lot on to his plate and proceeded to devour them in silence. The waiter was too dumbfounded to speak, looked on the performance with mingled astonishment and dismay. "Where again, is the portion of my friends?" asked Scherer, as he washed down the last remnant of the sixteen smelt with a liberal libation of dry sherry. Again the waiter went to the cook and again he returned with the same story that the supply of smelt was exhausted. "Bring the landlord at once," said Gottlieb; "this is disgraceful; but stay before that bring the next course." It came and was followed a little later by mine host with an anxious look upon his face. His strange customer was just swallowing the last mouthful and his friends sat disconsolate with empty plates before them. "You have disappointed me much, sir," said Gottlieb; "we are now in our third course, and I, even I, who have eaten everything the waiter has put upon the table, am not satisfied, while my friends, as yet, have not broken their fast."

One by one the guests had arisen from their seats, and a ring two deep was formed around the table at which the Philadelphians, or at least one of the party, was dining. "You remember the terms on which you have served this dinner," Gottlieb continued: "if there was not enough to go around I was not to be charged one cent. I give your own words. Bring in the remainder of the menu. I can and will eat it unto the last morsel. Know, gentlemen," said the speaker, bowing with dignity to the little crowd, as his vast chest swelled with conscious pride, "that I am Gottlieb Scherer, of Philadelphia and by the name of George Washington, I swear that I am the greatest eater in the United States." The restauranteur was a wise man; he acknowledged that he made no claim on Gottlieb for payment, and ordered the waiter to serve the remainder of the dinner.—Philadelphia Press.

Husband (2 a.m., after a curtain lecture)—"Well, all I've got to say is, if you are a person of such refinement and good breeding, you ought to be above talking to a drunken fellow at this time of the night."

Miss Miller, of Ferris, Texas, chloroformed her father's dogs, and eloped with the young man whom her father had forbidden the premises. The probabilities are that about a year hence she will conclude that her life would have been less miserable if she had chloroformed the young man and eloped with her father's dogs.

You may say what you please, but there is luck in horseshoes. A man nailed one up on the fence not long since, and a week afterward his wife, who used to wear out the furniture on him eloped with a friend to whom he was owing forty dollars so he got rid of two incumbrances at once.—Texas Siftings.

The Moving Bog in Ireland.

A correspondent of the Dublin Freeman's Journal has visited the scene of the moving bog at Castlerea. The following is an extract from his description of the phenomenon: "The good people of Castlerea appear to have become thoroughly frightened at the prospect of having their town submerged in a bog. The town of Castlerea in whose vicinity this unusual phenomenon has occurred, is actually built in the center of a vast tract of bog. Some dozen years ago an event similar to the present took place, a large portion of bog being bodily carried along by the river back into the town, working considerable injury before anything could be done to stop it. The mass of floating matter was on that occasion driven as far as Ballinasloe and a great many acres of excellent arable land were almost completely destroyed. The first indications of the present movement were noticed on Wednesday morning last by a boy, who, coming out from the house where he lived upon the Ballinagare road, about two miles outside Castlerea, was astonished to [illegible] where they have remained since. The mass of bog which moved in this singular manner is known in the district as the Baslick Bog. The rapidity of the movement is no doubt due to the action of the river Suck, which probably has helped to dislodge the floating mass. This river flows in a sort of semi-circle round the town. Up to Saturday this extremely curious bog motion continued, but when Saturday night came it appears to have stopped. The floating matter has completely covered the road between Castlerea and Ballinagare, and all traffic between the two places is suspended. I have seen the place where the road is blocked up, and am inclined to think that the height of the bog matter deposited therein is about fifteen feet on an average. About sixty perches of the Ballinagare road is blocked up, and I believe it is no exaggeration to say that about four thousand acres is covered by the bog since it commenced its journey. Large pieces of bog are carried into the town by the Suck, whose waters have recently flooded the country for miles around Castlerea. I do not think, however, there is any reason to apprehend the submersion of the town itself, as it is built considerably above the level of the surrounding country."

People Talked About.

The society ladies in New York who have received invitations to Mrs. Vanderbilt's and Mrs. Lorillard's fancy ball's, to take place in Easter week, are alleviating the tedium of Lent by devising and ordering costumes for the two events.

In a letter written to Ralph Waldo Emerson's daughter in 1875, Thomas Carlyle said: "Ever since the year 1833 your father has been in the habit of writing to me, greatly to my comfort and profit, and I certainly never destroyed with my will any scrap of paper his hand had been on."

The Boston correspondent of the Advance asked Wendell Philips a few days ago: "Are you writing any reminiscences of those days?" "No, I have not the time. It ought to be done. Garrison was the man to do it. He meant to, but he was always given to putting off things. At one time he took a retired study for the purpose, moved his books and papers into it, planning to work at the matter diligently, and—never entered the room again."

Mrs. Catharine Wolfe, for whom the most costly house at Newport is being built, has caused two large beach trees to be moved from Winchester, N. Y., to Ochre Point. These trees were planted by Miss Wolfe's father many years ago. One of them is thirty feet high and the other twenty-seven feet and the weight of each is about 18 tons. The cost of transplanting is several thousand dollars.

Marie Roze, wife of young Mapleson, was playing "Fidelio" recently to a large audience in Rochdale, England. When in the middle of the great aria in the first act, the manager's dog emerged from the wings, seated itself near the prima donna, and watched her movements with evident interest. Marie Roze finished her number undisturbed by the incident and went off, followed by the dog. She received a warm recall, when, to the amusement of the audience, she was again followed by her canine admirer, who evidently thought himself entitled to a share in the triumph.

Mr. Blaine has in his house in Washington a picture which is believed to be by Rubens. He bought it at a sale of some of the effects of Lord Baltimore, on the old estate in Maryland, and its identity was ascertained as follows: Mrs. Blaine visited an old shop in this city not long ago where engravings are sold. As she was turning over some old prints, what was her astonishment at seeing a steel engraving, old and yellow, of the picture her husband had bought at the Lord Baltimore sale. In the left hand corner of the plate was "Rubens pinxit!" She bought the engraving, of course, and now it and the painting hang side by side.

A verdict, with $10,000 damages, was obtained at Northumberland assizes by Miss Pattisman, a young lady aged twenty-five, of Tweedmouth, against William Richardson, aged thirty, for breach of promise of marriage. One of the objections of the defendant was that the lady was left-handed.

The fire in Chicago was still burning when the late Marshall Jewell, as a representative of the Hartford Fire Insurance company, stood on a barrel amidst the ruins telling a crowd of business men that his company would pay all losses in full, and on one of their number expressing a doubt, he asked the man for his policy, which amounted to about $10,000. Mr. Jewell took off his hat and wrote a check for the amount on the top of it.

A BRIDEGROOM'S BATTLE.

Showing That the Course of True Love is a Hard Stream go Get Across.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

A young gentleman of Lowndes county 'met his fate" in the person of one of Lowndes county's fair daughters, and every arangement had been made, the time appointed, the guests invited, for a consummation of the interesting event. The time came for him to come over to claim his bride. He got in his buggy and drove to the new bridge at Rocky ford, but alas! the swollen current had been too much for the bridge and it was impassable. He hastily retraced his steps a mile or two and then drove rapidly down to Startling's Ferry, thinking that the high water would not prevent his crossing on a flat, and perchance, by hard driving, he could make the time. He put whip and made as fast time as possible over a wet and bad road. Arriving at the ferry he was greatly troubled at finding that he could not cross. He next thought of the Bellville ferry, eight or ten miles lower down the river. At once he made for that place, but before he reached the flat he got into a lagoon of water and after driving some distance into it he saw that he could not cross. He turned his horse to retrace his steps and as soon as the animal got out of the road it commenced to bog and plunge in wild distress. The young man hastily displaced his clothing preparatory to getting out to cut the horse loose and in doing so he lost a valuable pistol and some gold coin which was laying loose in his pockets. After some considerable difficulty he got the horse out of the bog and rolled the buggy out by hand. His only alternative now was to travel up the river twenty-five or thirty miles to Quitman, take the cars for Valdosta and hire a conveyance, which he did.

When he arrived at the place where he was to claim his bride he was nearly two days behind time and he, of course found the family and friends in a disturbed state of mind, for they did not know the river was impassable and could not account for his failure to come to claim his bride. The affair was explained [illegible] and the couple are now made happy in each other's love.

FIELD AND FARM.

Farming Notes.

There is no economy in sprinkling old brine upon straw for cattle to eat. The excess of salt which they eat in this manner produces an unnatural thirst, and as a result they drink a large amount of cold water, which chills their stomachs and injures them. Another objection to the practice is that mingled with the brine are small particles of meat and grease, and the result is oftentimes dangerous. A good place for old brine is the manure heap or asparagus bed.

The Farmer's Review says: "On given amounts of food the sheep produces for the same weight of dry food nearly twice as much manure as the pig, while the ox produces even more than the sheep. This difference is due to the less digestible character of the food supplied to the sheep and ox. The quantity of manure produced during the same time and for the same body weight is, however, very similar with the three animals, the greater consumption of food by the pig counterbalancing the lower rate of manure production."

The American Cultivator calls attention to the circumstance that "it it not always the longest-legged trotters that make the most successful campaigners or win the fastest heats. Flora Temple, the first trotter to beat 2:20, stood only fourteen and three-quarters hands high, yet when in her prime no trotter upon the turf was big enough to beat her in a race when in condition. Hopeful, whose record to harness is 2:14 3-4, and to wagon 2:16 1-5, a figure never yet equaled by any other trotter to a wagon in a public race, stands but fifteen hands high when shod.

Turf, Field and Farm gives the following recipe to cure cribbing horses: "Take cayenne pepper (pepper in pods will also answer the purpose), and boil it down until a strong decoction is produced. Wash the stall, manger and feedbox with the decoction, and, if driving the horse, the neck yoke and wagon or sleigh tongue. Do this once a week, and the horse will in time be weaned of this habit of cribbing. This remedy is said to be more effectual than the application of kerosene or tar to the manger, stall, etc., commonly adopted in country stables."

Home Hints.

Young ladies, learn to be good cooks, No man worth having ever sought a divorce from a wife who is a good cook. The very idea of such a thing would be preposterous:

When about to buttonhole the bottom of a flannel skirt whether for child or woman, double the flannel as if you were to hem it, and baste it in place. this will give firmness and body in it, and it will last at least twice as long.

COUGH SYRUP.—Take one ounce each of thoroughwort, slippery-elm, flaxseed, gum-arabic and stick liquorise. Simmer together in one quart of water until the strength is entirely extracted. Strain carefully, add one pint best molasses and half a pound of loaf sugar simmer all well together and when cold bottle tightly. Dose a tablespoonful from three to six times a day according to the urgency of the case.

A correspondent of the Western Rural says that raw ripe tomatoes rubbed on warts will cause them to disappear. It is said that this discovery was made in a Michigan canning establishment, where a young women having warts on her hands was soon relieved of these excrescences after she began to cut up tomatoes. The correspondent referred to above had a colt with many warts on his nose and face, but a few applications of the juice of the tomatoes caused all to disappear. The remedy is simple and certainly worth trying, and while it will probably succeed in some instances, it will doubtless fail in others, as most of the known remedies do.

TO DEVELOP THE LUNGS.—In an answer to X., who wishes to know the best simple course to strengthen and develop his lungs, allow me to advise: Walk close into a corner with the arms extended and elevated to a level with the shoulders, at the same time drawing a full breath; repeat several times. Or stand in an open doorway, with the hands elevated one on either door post, fall forword, with a swaying motion several times, or until tired. Take care to inspire deeply. Repeat these many times each day and an increased chest measure will be the result as my experience.

Selecting Orchard Trees.

The Practical Farmer advises intendin purchasers as follows: "Nurserymen know, what purchasers will not believe, that short, stocky trees are better for an orchard, more likely to live, come quicker into bearing, than tall slender, trees, whether apple, peach, pear, plum or cherry: The reason is simply this: tall trees in the nursery rows for some reason get the start, overtop and overshadow those that started later, the sap of the tree consequently pushes its growth upward and into foliage while the roots are long, slender and few, consequently it does not bear transplanting as well, or does as well after being transplanted, as was expected from its fine appearance in the row. Stocky trees, on the contrary, being overshadowed, make a shorter growth, with branches and foliage nearer the ground, with numerous short roots that do not waste their substance in bleeding or by absorption from the soil, that cause the tree to start off in a rapid growth and outstrip its slender rival, and also come quicker into profitable bearing."

Sulphurous Acid in Consumption.

Most readers are aware that sulphurous acid is one of our most important bacillicides, and the more to be recommended as it can be inhaled with impunity. Mr. Julius Kircher, a pupil of Leibig, and owner of a chemical factory in Brooklyn, writes, says the Medical and Surgical Reporter, as follows to the Zeitsch. f. d. Oestr. Apoth. Verein: The observation of Koch has found a brilliant confirmation in my factory, where a large quantity of sulphur is evaporated daily. That in this process a great sulphurous acid is formed, can easily be imagined. During the forty-four years that my factory has existed, none of the many laborers have ever been affected by tubercular consumption, nay, more frequently, enough persons in the beginning stages of this disease applied for admittance and were cured within a few weeks, simply by inhaling the sulphurous acid. If not too far progressed, these individuals become strong, stout and perfectly healthy again. All disease zymotic in character, even cholera, stay away from his factory and those working there. Persons affected with bronchial catarrh are rapidly cured. Phthisical patients should live in rooms where [illegible] one or two drachms of sulphur are evaporated on a warm stove. First [illegible] there are increased irritation of cough and expectoration; then these cease and the individual rapidly improves. Convalescents should live for a time in rooms filled with aromatic watery vapors.

Eggs in Winter.

Patience Pringley presents in the F Stock and Poultry Bulletin a cheer picture of fowls well housed and f condition in pleasant contrast to which they are commonly during the cold months, an her case they reward hand constant lays when eggs are

"A house boarded, shin ered with tarred paper, and facing south, the flour tight and w tered with dry straw, is warm en for healthy fowls, even in pretty se weather. Prepare a good dusting pl in the sunlight. If you feed warm, sti ulating feed and meat to good you hens in a good house you are sure gather eggs every day. Some against feeding meat, but the hens wild for it in cold weather, and if y only will take the trouble to cook it, won't hurt a bit, but will make them lay This meat I buy at the butchers'; refuse stuff, and cheap. I boil bones, grin 'em up fresh, feed the meat chopped mixed with warm pudding or mush, in the morning, and the bones I keep b laying hens constantly. The liquid left after the meat and bones are boiled I use every drop of to mix with the mush, and I tell you it will make a flock of hens sing of eggs on a cold winter's morning.

Give an early breakfast of mush, make it one way always. Take, say fo a ten-quart pail of mush, two quarts o hot water; into this put either a te spoonful of red pepper and ginger or tablespoonful of egg food, and stir it then put in two q mashed vegetables, carrots or potatoes, at ble will answer; next pu shorts and then four quarts meal; dry, a little more hot water, and you ha make a smoking hot breakfast that w hens lay. Every other morning I s into the mush a few handfuls of chopp meat, as a particular treat. At noon give a little cracked corn, scattere among the floor litter, and occasionall buckwheat oats and wheat. At night give whole corn, invariably. For d I always give warm water, and it. I keep the houses d but not foul and hot."

Those Damp F

Well, what about them? that if you are not more will be the death of you y dear," you exclaim, "don't say t never mean to go with my feet da Yes, but the trouble is you do go ab with them just in that condition, a three-quarters of all physical troub and sickness you bring on yourselves due to no other cause. Men and are at least in a way more sensib this respect. They do not habitu tramp round in their slippers, or v thin slips of leather which are like ting paper. And-half the boot and seen in our streets ought to be used exclusively for in-door wear. Outside, with a climate like ours, they are a splendid example of the way in which people go about literally hunting for neuralgia, consumption or a sharp attack of illness in some other form. It is perfectly meet and right that the modern Ev should take a pride in her foot. W shod, and with a dainty military an not high French heel to her boot is proper she should be cons of the charms of youth and complime But thin cashmere uppers never make a foot look well. At best they are flimsy hearth-rug wear. A fairly drenching show of rain, and the spray beats up from the descending drops, wet the stockings through, laying the foundation of any one of a dozen troublesome complaints. Poor Mrs. Caudle, the good lady whose curtain lecture so long kept her patient husband, Job, awake, came to her death, as it stands written, through no more serious cause than a pair of thin shoes. Like all the rest of us she could talk to the men about their carelessness, but after all she died, and Job—thanks to his thick cowhide boots—lived to "mourn her loss." For the foundation of a lucrative doctor's practice, nothing better can be recommended than damp feet. It is the source of more than one half of all the consumption and sickness among "our girls." Keep those damp feet dry. I know it sounds odd, but it is just what I mean.

Wear thin shoes, or slippers in the house if you want to, but whenever you step out on the damp ground, and especially in the evening and during damp days, put on thick shoes. Try to keep a cool head, but be sure to keep warm, dry feet.

The Locomotive Engineer at a Concert.

"I was loafing around the streets l night," said Jim Nelson, one of the b est locomotive engineers running i New Orleans, "and as I had nothing do I dropped into a concert and hear slick-looking Frenchman play a piano a way that made me feel all over in spo As soon as he sat down on the stool knew by the way he handled himself that he understood the machine he was running. He tapped the keys away up one end, just as if they were gauges, and wanted to see if he had water enough. Then he looked up as if he wanted to know how much steam he was carrying, and the next moment he pulled open the throttle and sailed out on the main line, just as if he was a half an hour late. You could hear her thunder over culverts and bridges, and getting faster and faster, until the fellow rocked about in his seat like a cradle. Somehow I thought it was old '36' pulling a passenger train and getting out of the way of a 'special.' The fellow worked the keys on the middle division like lightning, and then he flew along the north end of the line like a buzz saw, and I got excited. About the time I was fixing to tell him to cut her off a little, he kicked the dampers under the machine wide open, pulled the throttle away back in the tender, and Jerusalem, jumpers! how he did run. I couldn't stand it any longer, and yelled to him that she was 'pounding' on the left side, and if he wasn't careful he'd drop his ash pan. But he didn't hear. No one heard me. Everything was flying and whizzing. Telegraph poles on the side of the track looked like a row of cornstalks, the trees appeared to be a mud bank, and all the time the exhaust of the old machine sounded like the hum of a bumble bee. I tried to yell out, but my tongue wouldn't move. He went around curves like a bullet, slipped an eccentric, blew out his soft plug, went down grades fifty feet to the mile, and not a confounded brake set. She went by the meeting-point at a mile and a half a minute, and calling for more steam. My hair stood up like a cat's tail, because I knew the game was up. Sure enough, dead ahead of us was the headlight of the 'special.' In a daze I heard the crash as they struck, and I saw cars shivered into atoms, people mashed and mangled and bleeding and gasping for water. I heard another crash as the French professor struck the deep keys away down on the lower end of the southern division I came to my senses. There he was at a dead standstill with the door of the fire-box of the machine open, wiping the perspiration off his face, and [illegible]. If I live to be a thousand years old I'll never forget the [illegible] that Frenchman gave me on the piano."—[New Orleans Times-Democrat.

THE FRONT GATE.

An old and crippled gate am I,
And twenty years have passed
Since I was hung up, high and dry,
Betwixt these posts so fast.
And now I have grown so powerful weak—
Despised by man and beast—
I'm scarcely strong enough to squeak,
Although I'm never greased.

'Twas twenty years ago, I say,
When Mr. Enos White
Came kind of hanging 'round my way
'Most every other night.
He hung upon my starboard side
And she upon the tother—
Till Susan Smith became a bride,
And in due time a mother.

I groaned intensely when I heard—
Despite I am no churl—
My doom breathed in a single word—
The baby was a girl!
And as she grew and grew and grew,
I loud bemoaned my fate—
For she was very fair to view,
And I—I was the gate!

Then, in due time, a lover came,
Betokening my ruin—
A dapper fellow, Brown by name,
The grown up baby wooin'!
They swung upon me in the gloam,
And talked of moon and star—
They're married now, and live at home
Along with ma and pa.

My lot was happy for a year—
No courting, night or day—
I had no thought, I had no fear,
Bad luck would come my way;
But oh, this morning—save the mark,
There came a wild surprise:
A shadow flitted—grim and dark—
Across my sunny skies.

A doctor with a knowing smile—
A nurse with a face serene—
A bustle in the house the while,
Great Scott! what can it mean?
My hinges ache—my lock is weak—
My pickets are a whirl—
I hear that awful doctor speak—
It is another girl.

THE ODD-LOOKING MAN.

It is just thirty years to-day since we were all seated at the table d'hote of a fashionable hotel in Venice. "We," means my father, mother, sister and self. The two former are long since departed this life. My sister, a young lady traveling for educational purposes, or, as old John Dickens would have said, "to consolidate her modern languages and music," is now a wife and mother. I had just finished my terms at Oxford, and, as we all fancied we should benefit by a change of air and scene, we set out for a twelvemonth's continental tour. In due season we reached Venice, where I overheard the remark which suggested the heading of the present article. Our vis-a-vis was an English clergyman, with his family, whom we then met for the first time on our travels. The eldest daughter, glancing stealthily at her opposite neighbor, and with difficulty repressing a smile, whispered audibly enough in her father's ear: "What a strange-looking young man that is facing us." Hereupon Paterfamilias, putting his quizzing-glass to his eye, and staring deliberately at the object of the remark exclaimed emphatically: "He is indeed an odd-looking fellow."

The victim of these unflattering observations was myself! I have always been what a cockney would call "a rum un to look at." Perhaps no other definition would suit me as well. I am not, strictly speaking, "The Ugly Man,"—neither am I "The Lean Man," "The Fat Man," "The Short Man," or "The Tall Man." My features, individually, are neither plain nor unprepossessing. Yet the ensemble—ah! there is the rub! There is a screw loose somewhere! Figuratively, the shoe pinches. But had my misfortunes been confined to a general peculiarity of appearance, I should certainly have kept my own counsel, and, so to speak, consumed my own smoke with the pipe of a philosopher. But it was far more than than this. Hereditary predisposition had bequeathed to me a threefold idiosyncrasy. Speech, person and nervous organization were alike out of tune. The early consciousness of these failings rendered me, from childhood, shy and sensitive to a degree which more healthily constituted persons could scarcely even imagine; as I grew to boyhood and youth these feelings became more intensified, and when I had reached my eighteenth year, I was literally unable to frequent places of public resort and amusement, or even to enjoy a quiet daily walk, without undergoing positive torture. My friends failed not to misjudge me, and attributed to me, most unjustly, a morose and misanthropical disposition. I was thus, by a sort of fatality, deprived of the natural sympathies and counsel of those who were nearest and dearest to me. In due season, my school days, which had been hourly torture to me, whether in classroom or playground, came to an end. Impelled by natural ambition, and complying with the wishes of my parents, I boldly resolved to risk the ordeal of a university life, with a faint hope—heaven save the mark—of eventually embracing the clerical profession. So I entered my name at a college, and in due time presented myself for matriculation. Alas! my amour propre was destined, at the outset, to be rudely shaken. Chancing to encounter, beneath the gateway of my college, a merry group of my fellow-gownsmen, one of them, eyeing me askance, audibly expressed a hope that "that odd-looking fellow didn't intend to come there." This was no flattering welcome, on the part of Alma Mater, to one so sensitive and self-conscious as myself.

But worse still was to follow. While undergoing the preliminary examination in the college hall—of which, in point of scholarship, I had little dread—one of my fellow freshmen remarked to his neighbor: "Good heavens! did you ever see such a phiz!" This plunged the iron more deeply still into my sore and stricken soul. It capped the climax, as it were. Within less than a week I was forced to leave my college and renounce all the fond and vain hopes which my friends had built on my university career.

I now became desperate, and threw myself into various forms of solitary and unsocial dissipation. Having inherited from a distant relative a small legacy to enable me to follow some liberal career, I squandered away the whole capital, on attaining my majority, with insane recklessness. Having thus reduced myself to the condition of the penniless prodigal, I gratefully accepted the offer of accompanying my family abroad.

Byron tells us that foreign travel is the strongest mental stimulus next to ambition. Notwithstanding my repeated failures and disappointments, I now clung to this last forlorn hope of ridding myself, by a strong effort, seconded by the influence of novel and striking scenes, of the incubus of self-consciousness. I endeavored to counteract my personal deficiencies by adopting various modes of dress, which I fancied most suitable for the purpose, regardless of fashion or expense, so long as I still had the family purse to resort to. I studied my imperfect enunciation for hours together in my room, and before my glass, fancying myself a comedian preparing for his debut, or an M. P. rehearsing his maiden speech. To combat my shyness I consulted an experienced medical practitioner, to whom I fully described my normal symptoms, and who recommended me to try colored spectacles. For what added to my confusion was the fact that whenever people chanced to look at me, the nervous twitching and scared expression of my eye naturally attracted their attention, and caused them to stare the harder. But it was all to no purpose; my fatality still clung to me wherever I went. My voice, indeed, grew stronger and more emphatic under the severe training of my Demosthenic exercises. But its inherent defects became proportionately more marked and offensive. My green or blue goggles—for I tried every variety and shade of color—only served to metamorphose my queer-looking phiz into an exquisite model for a carnival mask.

To give one illustration among a hundred: One summer's evening we were all standing on the terrace of the far-famed Righi, above the Lake of Lucerne, watching the sun-set. For a single half hour of rapture the combined influences of the glorious panorama completely absorbed the sense of my painful subjectivity. Ah, "could I but have kept my spirit to that flight!" But my demon was at my elbow. Not long after I happened to be walking up and down the now deserted plateau with my sister, expatiating on the beauties of the surrounding landscape. Suddenly we were overtaken by two young Englishmen, tourists like ourselves, whom we had hitherto taken no notice of. As they passed by, one of them exclaimed to his companion, in a sort of stage whisper, "By Jove, now we have seen something worth looking at. For the life of me I couldn't keep my eyes off that odd-looking fellow's face all the time we were supposed to be watching the sunset." In a single moment all the sweet and loving influences of that divine vision faded out of my mind. I can suggest, no better comparison than that of a man suddenly waked out of a dream of paradise by the scathing scoff of a Mephistopheles. Again I felt myself under the ban of my fellow creatures. Again I doubted of heaven and humanity.

Reader, pity and pardon me, for I invented nothing, but am telling a plain, unvarnished tale—"an ower true story."

On our return from England, I had to mourn the loss of an affectionate mother, who died almost broken-hearted at the failure of all the hopes she built on her first-born, and, as was supposed, her favorite child. Henceforth I resolved to bury myself in my books, and turn my back once for all, on a world which had hitherto greeted me only with contempt and ridicule. For a year or two I steadfastly adhered to this plan, when it was temporarily suspended by one of those mysterious chances which occasionally befall the most unobtrusive and secluded of lives. So with myself. I made acquaintance, quite accidentally, with a young lady of personal attractions, and yet more remarkable talents. Circumstances threw us much together, and I soon began, for the first time in my life, to realize the tender passion. Strange to say, the feeling was reciprocated, and, with the consent at least, if not approbation, of our mutual families, a day was fixed for our union. But whether through accident or a dispensation of Providence, an unexpected hitch occurred at the eleventh hour. Suspicions were awakened of a loose screw somewhere. And, finally, I was compelled, by stress of circumstances, to make a clean breast of it, and the engagement was amicably terminated. I will only add that this lady, eminently fitted by her talents to shine in the social sphere, subsequently made a worldly and better assorted marriage, and is now the mother of a numerous family.

Relapsing once more into silence and solitude, I pursued my favorite studies to the detriment of my physical health, hitherto excellent. The doctors unluckily prescribed stimulants, and with the unlooked for result that I who, up to my thirtieth year, had been remarkably abstemious, and, indeed, a water drinker during the earlier part of my life, now speedily became a confirmed tippler not to say an "habitual drunkard." I do not attempt self-justification, nor dare I allege moral irresponsibility. I can only plead extenuating circumstances. All I can affirm is that an abnormal nervous organization, from the very outset of this new phase of my life, found instant and inexpressible relief from copious alcoholic libations. Rather, perhaps, it was the substitution of one phase of temporary insanity for another. Alas! how often and how fatally have I practically parodied the Shakspearean aphorism. "There's a pleasure in (alcoholic) madness none but (alcoholic) madmen know." My constitution gradually gave way, until a chronic state of nervous exaltation was finally capped by a smart fit of delirium tremens. Providentially rallying out of the jaws of death, I made repeated vows of abstemiousness and even abstinence. But I was continually relapsing. The latter stages were even worse than the former. I lost all relish for study, and spent days and weeks in a lethargic state, verging on moral paralysis. It was neither the dreamy paradise of the lotus eater, nor even the ecstatic hallucinations of the opium eater in the earliest stages of his fatal indulgence. Rather did I experience that chronic sense of conscious delirium, and of almost demoniacal possession which is said to haunt the victim of opium in the latter stages of his progress.

One by one all my friends had reluctantly "cut" him whom they considered the "disgrace of the family." I found myself alone in the world. My married sister, residing in the South of France, had throughout maintained an affectionate and sympathetic correspondence with her erring brother, and now kindly urged me to spend a winter season under her roof. I accepted gratefully; and, thanks to her watchful influence, regained, for a while, the mastery over my passion. But after a brief spell of reform, we were again forced to separate, for fear of public scandal and a bad example to the household.

The slopes of the Maritime Alps, it is well known, abound in health resorts for summer tourists. So soon, then, as I found myself once more cast adrift, I resolved, upon seeking out the most remote and least frequented of the mountain fastnesses. There it was my fixed purpose to put a sure, and, as I hoped, speedy finishing stroke to a useless and humiliating existence. In short, I had deliberately determined on perpetrating alcoholic suicide. On the extreme frontiers of France and Piedmont, perched some 7,000 feet above the sea level, lies a narrow plateau, or mountain lodge, commanding an extensive and almost unrivaled prospect. The place takes its name of Notre Dame de la Fenetre from a window-like aperture in an overhanging mountain, which a pious tradition attributes to the miraculous passage of the Blessed Virgin, bearing the infant Jesus in her arms. On the site of her resting place, below this mountain, a chapel has been erected, consecrated to the cult of the Madonna. It attracts thousands of pilgrims from the distant towns and villages, both of France and Italy, on the 10th of August, the Festa of the Assumption. Here is also a modest but comfortable auberge, for the accommodation of the numerous tourists who visit this romantic and salubrious spot during the brief summer season.

I took my abode in this little hostelry, in the month of July, 18—, with the full expectation of ending my days there, and at no distant date. Meanwhile, I held doggedly aloof from all intercourse save with the rough but kindly and honest folks who supplied my daily needs. But to no purpose did I invoke death. I could neither live nor die. At last, strangely enough, a sudden revulsion of feeling took possession of me. Hope, as it were, even against hope, seemed to revive in me. Again I hankered after life, and aspired to a more normal existence.

Reader, do you believe in presentiments? Hitherto I had been a skeptic and proud of my skepticism, in all matters savoring of spiritual or extramaterial agency. But natural instinct will revenge itself, from time to time, upon even the most stubborn of unbelievers. In a moment I fell a victim to credulity; I felt a vague, but none the less positive, assurance of some event about to befall me which was destined to change the current of my whole life. Of its precise nature I had not even a glimpse, but it was a strange fancy connected with hopefulness rather than misgiving. Did I not already know the worst? Surely any change, no matter what, must be welcome to me. Nevertheless, at the outset, I strove to stifle it, as the promptings of a childish superstition; or yet more probably a symptom of mental deterioration, perhaps even of brain-softening. Despite all my efforts, it would whisper in my ear, like a still small voice, day and night.

One morning I woke with this idea more vividly impressed on my mind than ever; and, at a late hour, as usual, rose and dressed for my solitary midday meal. I heard strange voices in the adjoining room, and clearly distinguished the unwonted accents of my native tongue. Two English ladies had bespoken rooms for a week's stay. Only a few days had elapsed since such an announcement would have failed to awaken the faintest interest in my mind. The case was otherwise now. I felt a sudden craving for congenial intercourse with my unknown fellow-countrywomen.

To brace my nerves for the interview I drank more deeply than usual, but the excitement of anticipation secured to me the full possession of all my faculties. I entered the salon; the two ladies, seated at the open window, were silently admiring the prospect. In a foreign land in general, and in an out-of-the-world place like that in which I was now staying in particular, the sight of a fellow-countryman is welcome. Within half an hour we were on terms of cordial intimacy. The two ladies stood in the relation of aunt and niece. The former, though somewhat advanced in life, was still a comely dame. The years of the latter could barely have reached a quarter of a century. Without any pretensions to regular beauty of features Sylvia, for such was her name, was undeniably prepossessing, and an intellectual and amiable type of countenance proved a faithful index to her moral and mental qualities. Both were evidently women of culture and refinement.

On this memorable evening, which marked a new epoch in the lives of two of the party, the truth of the adage "In vino veritas" was strikingly exemplified. In the course of conversation my companions expressed a natural though well-bred curiosity to learn the motives of which could have prompted an educated Englishman like myself to seek a living tomb in these mountain solitudes. My heart, which had so long borne the burden of its silent seal, burned within me, and I spoke its secret sorrows unreservedly. Little by little I unfolded the sad story of my whole past life. I spoke the truth, the whole truth, nothing but the truth. And my confidence was aptly repaid by the rapt attention and unaffected sympathy of my listeners. Nor did I omit a timid reference to that strange foreshadowing of a coming crisis in my life, which had lately taken so mysterious a hold of my imagination. To my surprise, they expressed less incredulity than I anticipated. Each, in turn, narrated some startling story of a kindred character, drawn from personal experience or founded on the testimony of reliable friends and acquaintances in proof of the credibility of presentiments in general. Not till a late hour in the evening did we part company, with the mutual promise to meet early next morning for a stroll before breakfast.

I do not pretend to explain the phenomenon, but that night I went to bed, for the first time in ten years, without my usual "night-cap." Yet there stood the fatal narcotic by my bedside, powerful enough to plunge most men in a Lethean torpor of twenty-four hours' duration, but which had only the effect of drugging my over-excited brain for a couple of hours' disturbed repose at the most. Neither can I claim the merit of resisting the tempter. I simply forgot it. It was as if some good angel had spread an invisible wing around me, and my evil genius had momentarily departed.

Next morning I awoke early, and more refreshed than was my wont. None of us failed to keep our appointed tryst. Gentle reader, as I cannot impart to you my own eyes wherewithal to see the incredible fact, so shall I not complain of your hardness of heart if you withhold your belief from my bare assertion. Yet a wise man once said: "I believe it because it is incredible." For ten long years had I never once dispensed with my "stirrup-cup" on rising of a morning; and yet it is a fact that my oblivion of the previous evening was repeated on this very morning. I left my morning draught, my "pick-me-up," untouched on my dressing-table, and sailed forth with a brisk step and smiling face to greet my fair companions. I had again literally forgotten my temporary remedy—my chronic poison. Nay, more. Encouraged by the unobtrusive but ever ready sympathy of my now constant companions, I never once relapsed into my former habits of excess during the whole of the ensuing week. Having the house entirely to ourselves, for the season was now far advanced, we naturally became inseparables. Together we enjoyed our daily walks and excursions, shared the same meals, held our long and ever more sympathetic and confidential tete-a-tete in a snug corner of the public sitting room. It caused none of us the least surprise when, at the end of the week, we felt as if we had never been strangers to each other.

To one of us, at least, the idea of parting, perhaps forever, became almost insupportable. Forgetting my former presentiment, I had now become a prey to the daily incubus of an impending farewell! Yet I was not in love. Long since had I taught myself the bitter lesson that celibacy, in its dreariest aspect and phases, was my preordained lot. I was more than what society calls "a detrimental"—I was literally "an impossible." Such, at least, was the stern judgment which my self-scrutinizing conscience had finally and irrevocably pronounced against myself. My morbid sensitiveness and quick self-consciousness had, as it were, branded me, to my own eyes, with the stigma—the bitter brow-mark—of a social Cain! But the eyes of love are proverbially bandaged, or rather love beholds its object through colored spectacles.

The last evening had arrived that we were to spend together, and I proposed a farewell visit to the Lake of the Col, a favorite place of resort for tourists. A brief half hour's walk from the auberge brought us thither. Never was a more lovely autumnal evening. All three sat down silently on the shore, side by side. No one uttered a word for some minutes; each of us thought the more. A light shower had fallen a little while before, and the distant mountain range was still spanned by a faint arch of a rainbow. We looked long at it and at each other alternately and speechlessly. The stillness at last became oppressive, for there is a silence which, like darkness, may be felt. The spell was broken by Sylvia.

"How beautiful is yonder rainbow!" she said.

"Yes," I murmured, half unconsciously; "and just as yonder brilliant arch melts away into the dusk of the gloaming, so shall the brighter hues of my present life fade again into the outer darkness of the past."

"Yet," she whispered, edging unconsciously nearer to me, "there is a beautiful old Greek fable which represents Iris as the chosen messenger of the gods to mankind, the divine harbinger of hope and love."

The last monosyllable fluttered a little, I thought, on her lip, and caused me instinctively to raise my face to hers. She slightly changed color, and in that single glance I read the oracle of a woman's eye. Yet, even then, my conscience smote me, and I shrank and recoiled from accepting the full interpretation. Involuntarily I clasped her hand and passionately exclaimed:

"Sylvia! would to heaven we had never met or met never more to part. Nature has endowed you with her choicest gifts and graces of mind and person—whereas I—O God!" I cried, in an outburst of passion and resentment against my fate, "why hast thou made me thus, and cursed me with the Tantalus gift of a brain to conceive and a heart to crave after that which my bodily presence and speech eternally forbid me to hope for and realize."

Uttering this wild imprecation rather than prayer, I hid my face in my hands and buried my short lived hopes in the lowest deep of despair.

How long I remained thus I know not, but a ray of light flashed upon my eyes, and I felt both my hands gently but firmly clasped in those of her I dared not love. Then a whisper, soft and low, yet clear as a crystal bell, fell on my ear. "To me at least, since the first evening we met, you have never once been 'The Odd-looking Man.'"

On our way back to the inn the fresh chimes of the Angelus came floating upward from the belfry of the little chapel below.

"It reminds me," I said, "of a distant peal of wedding bells."

"To me," she replied, "it seems rather like the chorus of souls eternally wedded in heaven."

* * * * * * *

On the anniversary of that day, ten years later, a married couple, with three healthy, happy-looking children, alighted, from muleback, at the inn of the Madonna della Finestra. Evidently English, they yet seemed no strangers to the place, though the inmates of the house failed to recognize them; if it were not that the aubergiste remarked casually to his wife, "that the stranger reminded him of a guest of theirs some ten years ago. But," added he, "the other was a queer looking fellow, quanto mai, and never seemed to be in his sober senses like, night or day, till the last week he spent with a couple of English ladies, the younger of whom was his 'inamorata.' This Englishman, however, looks as if he had never tasted a drop of good liquor for the last ten years of his life; besides being tanto volte a more decent looking fellow altogether than 'Pal'ro poverino.'"

The same evening, when the stranger and his family were sitting down to dinner, the Angelus rang out, as usual, its sweet and simple hymn. Then turning fondly toward his wife, he said: "My Sylvia! my Providence! this is the evening of the tenth anniversary of the day when we hailed in those evening chimes the benison of heaven on our betrothal. Now let us hear in them a renewed benediction on our yet happier wedded life and beloved offspring!"

And she, with clasped hands and smiling through her tears, whispered a heartfelt "Amen!"

Poisoned Lunatics.

Staunton (Va.) Special to Chicago Times: Mahone's managers at the Western lunatic asylum in this place are greatly embarrassed and in a state of great excitement, caused by the poisoning of six or seven male lunatics. Yesterday morning sedative medicine as usual was administered to some of the patients. In a few minutes after taking it, Thomas W. Adams of Loudon county, J. M. Holman of Spotsylvania, John W. Hines of Bath, Isaac F. Sperry and Leonard T. Wilkins of Northampton, died in great agony. Several others were made ill, but all the latter, except Mathew Vaughn of Prince Edward, will recover. The medicine was prepared by Assistant Physician W. H. Butler over night, as is the custom. After being prepared the medicine was placed in a locker in the attendants' room of the asylum. Yesterday morning the medicine was taken to the patients and administered to them by the nurse. There are but two ways in which the trouble could have occurred: Some malicious person may have obtained access to the locker where the medicine was placed and added some poisonous drug to the potions, or some person may have accomplished the same fiendish purpose by adding fatal drugs to the bottle of medicine in the prescription department before the doses were dealt out by Dr. Butler. All five who died from the effects of the fatal doses experienced the most excruciating agony. They begged piteously for some one to give them relief. Dr. R. S. Hamilton, superintendent of the asylum, and Dr. Butler, his assistant, rendered all the assistance in their power, but without avail. In less than twenty minutes after swallowing the deadly medicine the five lunatics named were dead. All the officers of the asylum are new appointees of the Mahone party. As soon as that party came into power the old officers of the institution were turned out and those now in charge given their places. The excitement caused by this affair, both among the inmates of the asylum and the town people, is inexpressible. Mahone and his leaders come in for a share of the people's indignation for displacing the old physician of the institution. An autopsy is to be held at once, which will determine the character of the poison by which the patients were killed. This will be followed by a rigid judicial investigation of the management of the asylum.

A CLOSE-FISTED ECONOMIST.

The farmer sat in his easy chair
Between the fire and the lamplight's glare;
His face was ruddy and full and fair;
His three small boys in the chimney nook
Conned the lines of a picture book;
His wife, the pride of his home and heart,
Baked the biscuit and made the tart,
Laid the table and drew the tea,
Deftly, swiftly, silently;
Tired and weary, weak and faint,
She bore her trials without complaint,
Like many another household saint—
Content all selfish bliss above
In the patient ministry of love.

At last, between the clouds of smoke
That wreathed his lips, the farmer spoke;
"There's taxes to raise and int'rest to pay,
And if there should come a rainy day
'Twould be mighty handy, I'm bound to say,
T' have something put by. For folks must die;
An' there's funeral bills, and grave stones to buy—
Enough to swamp a man, purty nigh;
Besides, there's Edward an' Dick an' Joe
To be provided for when we go;
So, if I were you, I'll tell you what I'd du;
I'd be savin' of wood as ever I could—
Extra fires don't do any good;
I'd be savin' of soap and savin' of ile,
And run up some candles once in a while;
I'd rather be sparin' of coffee and tea,
For sugar is high,
An' all to buy,
And cider is good enough drink for me;
I'd be kind o' careful about my clo'es
And look out sharp how the money goes—
Gewgaws is useless, nater knows;
Extra trimmin'
'S the bane of women.
I'd sell the best of my cheese and honey,
An' eggs is as good, nigh 'bout, as money,
An' as to the carpet you wanted new—
I guess we can make the old one du;
An' as for the washer an' sewin' machine,
Them smooth-tongued agents, so pesky mean,
You'd better get rid of 'em, slick and clean.
What do they know 'bout women's work?
Do they calkilate women was made to shirk?"

Dick and Edward and little Joe
Sat in the corner in a row;
They saw their patient mother go
On ceaseless errands to and fro;
They saw that her form was bent and thin,
Her temples gray, her cheeks sunk in;
They saw the quiver of lip and chin—
And then, with a wrath he could not smother,
Outspoke the youngest, frailest brother:
"You talk of savin' wood an' ile
An' tea an' sugar all the while,
But you never talk of savin' mother!"

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Patchwork.

Piecing quilts is one of my manias, although I am not an "old maid," but the happy mother of three chubby, fun-loving, romping children. Not that I wish to cast any reflections on the old maids—all honor to them. My experience teaches me, contrary to popular opinion, that they are the most thoughtful, unselfish part of society. But to my subject. I do not approve of the way some quilts are made—that is, to buy the material in two or three distinct colors, then cut it into numerous small bits, which require weeks of hard labor to again put together—that kind of work I think the height of folly. The principal object of piecing quilts should be to make use of all the odd scraps of prints, delaines and ginghams that accumulate. When this sort of work is left (as it usually is) for the long winter months, the scrap bag is generally well filled. Now every housewife wishes to make the most of everything and it is quite as necessary to make the most of your time as it is to economize in any other direction. In the beginning, if you have two or three nice separate colors, and enough of the material for piecing a quilt, a suitable pattern should be selected for an outside spread, and then piece that quilt before commencing the second one. After it is finished you will know exactly what is left of your bright colors and how to use them to the best advantage in the next quilt. Then again, care should be exercised to use the largest patterns first, it saves cutting the large pieces into small blocks; the largest sizes should be used first leaving the smallest patterns for the last quilt or quilts. The hit or miss pattern is a good one for common, as it uses to advantage all odd pieces. Let me tell you what kind of a quilt I intended to make. I think it will be a new idea to most of you. I am saving a piece of each dress and apron of the children's, from their babyhood up, and after they are grown I shall take all those pieces and make each one, separately, a quilt of their own baby and childhood dresses and aprons. Don't you think it will be a good plan? I hope some of you will do the same. The children will prize it above gold after mother has gone to her long home. I have quite a variety of quilt patterns—moon and stars, maple leaf, bear's paw, road to California and back, wheel of fortune, hay stack, old maids' puzzle, sunflower, etc. If anyone who is piecing quilts would like one of my patterns I would be glad to send it by mail for two 3-cent stamps, which would cover postage and trouble.

Kitchen Keramics.

It is said that extravagance characterizes the age, but there is a sort of ingenious economy which marks it also. There is certainly a disposition on the part of a great many people to waste nothing. One illustration of this is found in the way in which handsome rugs are made: Wind in balls every bit of woolen yarn or zephyr that you have in your possession. Old mittens can be raveled, and the yarn of which they were made is available after it is washed. When you have gathered enough of these odds and ends together, knit them with common knitting needles, and in the old-fashioned "garter-stitch," so well known to every one who ever learned to knit, in long strips. After the strips are done wet them and dry in the oven or with hot irons, and then ravel out the greater part of the strip, leaving only enough to serve to hold the yarn in place, so that it may be sewed firmly to a foundation of burlap or heavy linen. The greater variety of colors, of course, the prettier the rug will be. This knitting and raveling may be all done when the hands thus employed would otherwise be idle; it affords pleasant work for grandmother, too, who can knit with her eyes shut at any hour of day or night. Another useful article may be, at least in part, composed of the bits of zephyr left from worsted work—an afghan knit in stripes. For one stripe use the variegated worsteds; let the colors come just as it happens, like the old-fashioned "hit-and-miss" stripes in carpets; knit this with any kind of open-work stitch, then have the next stripe of a solid color, and so on, until the afghan is of the proper width; the ends of the stripes may be finished in points, with or without tassels. This can be used for a carriage wrap, or a lounge quilt for the house.

Handsome table covers are made of alternate squares or half-squares of basket flannel and of velveteen; one made of brown and lemon color is particularly effective. The spread should be lined; it is not necessary that the entire lining should be of expensive material; unbleached factory cloth will answer, providing that the facing is deep. No border is requisite; but, if one prefers to have it, this should be of velveteen, and the facing of a contrasting color. If the blocks are neatly put together, no needlework is necessary to adorn the spread; but of course this point may be determined according to the taste and means of the maker.

Here is a bit of economy: Examine the squashes in the cellar; if they show any signs of decay, bring them out to the light; cut them in pieces; bake the good part in the shell, and when tender scrape it all out, and dry it just as our grandmothers dried pumpkin for pies, before pumpkin meal and canned pumpkin were dreamed of; then, when ready use for pies, soak the dried squash all night in a little water, or in sweet milk; then proceed as for fresh squash pies. This is an economy that will be appreciated by every member of the family, for the pies are excellent.

A very nice egg sauce to serve with boiled fish is made by melting about an ounce of butter with a tablespoonful of water and a teaspoonful of flour mixed with it. When the sauce begins to thicken take it from the fire and stir an ounce more of butter in it; the heat of the sauce will melt the butter, and yet it will not have the disagreeable flavor of butter melted over a hot fire. Before doing this have ready two or three hard boiled eggs chopped fine, and after you have beaten the butter in stir the eggs in.

A beautiful toilet set for the dressing case is made by covering a large cushion with cream-colored satin; around the edge of the cushion put a pleating of ribbon of the same color and fall of lace. The lace is not to be pleated, but gathered a little. On the top of the cushion paint in water colors two or three pansies, with leaves and stems to relieve all stiffness. The bottles that help to make up the set should be covered and decorated to match. The flowers on the bottles need not be pansies, however.

A new way to prepare a fig cake is to first bake a large, round loaf of cake. This should be light and rich. When it is cold, cut in three layers or slices; for this you must have a thin and very sharp knife, and must exercise great care not to break the slices. Between these layers spread a filling made of boiled frosting, with the figs chopped fine and cooked for two or three minutes in the frosting. The top may be frosted with plain frosting, or it may be omitted altogether.

A danger to be avoided in making bread is that of using too much yeast. This is particularly the case when yeast-cakes are used; the dry, hard squares look so incapable of raising a pan of dough. These cakes should always be dissolved in a little warm water, and then be strained through a muslin cloth; this is likely to prevent the almost bitter flavor they sometimes give to bread. If one young cook will give heed to this, I shall not have lived in vain.

Cheap ginger cookies are made thus: One cup of molasses, one cup of brown sugar, one cup of warm water, one cup of lard, two tablespoonfuls of ginger, and one teaspoonful of soda; stir with flour, but do not mix hard; bake in a quick oven. Do not roll as thin as for ginger-snaps, and cut the cookies with a cutter which has deep and generous scallops.

Never throw away even a small piece of Hamburg or Torchon; it will not fail to be of use some time. One way to use short bits of insertion is to set them in the shoulder seams of children's aprons or dresses, or down the back seam of sleeves to enlarge them. Pretty bits are made of pique, with a stripe of insertion through the center.

There is nothing which will give such lightness to ginger bread as the use of sour cream; one cup of sour cream, with a teaspoonful of soda to sweeten it, will, with a cup of molasses, a teaspoonful of ginger, and flour enough for a stiff batter, make an excellent breakfast cake. This is best when warm, but is good when cold also.

Pies made of canned whortleberries should have an under crust only; then over the top put strips of puff paste. Too much crust with the berries makes an almost tasteless pie.

The addition of a little mace to a veal soup will give an agreeable flavor to it. Do not put in enough to make it a distinct flavor, but put it in with the herbs and pepper and salt.

BULLFROG TALK.

Crodunk, crodunk! I'm the wisest frog,
That ever lived in this muddy bog.
I know the world, though they say I'm green,
For I see it all behind a screen.

Crodunk, crodunk! I keep a school
Down in the shady, watery pool.
The young ones learn to dive and swim,
And then they sing a temperance hymn.

Crodunk, crodunk! I have a wife;
But she and I ne'er meet in strife.
All know I often say "Kerchog!"
Which means that I'm a model frog.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

Harry's Visit.

"Come, Harry, it is splendid weather, and we have permission from Mr. Stiles to pick blackberries on his place; so hurry, along and get your basket."

"Oh, that will be fun!" and Harry started off; but in a very few moments he returned, with a slow step and thoughtful look.

"Boys, I'm very sorry, but I can't go with you this afternoon."

"Why not; won't your mother let you?"

"I didn't ask her, but I have another engagement."

"You must go, Harry, we can't do without you. We came all this way for you, and I think you are disobliging not to go."

"No, John; you know I would love to go, but you had better not wait now, for you have no time to spare. I hope you will find plenty of blackberries."

Harry watched the boys as they went gaily off, with a little sigh, but soon went into the house. By the time he reached his mother's room he was in good spirits, and seemed to have forgotten his disappointment.

"Mother, I'm going over to Mrs. Graham's. She always expects me on Saturdays, and I haven't been there for several weeks."

"Very well, Harry; but you had better go into the orchard and gather some of those nice apples and take them with you."

"I thank you, mother, that will be nice. Come, Maggie, don't you want to help me?" he asked, turning to his little sister, sitting by her mother's side.

"Yes, Harry; and won't you take me with you?"

"If mother says so; but hurry now."

The mother's eyes followed her boy lovingly. She had been standing by an open window, and had heard all that was said. To give him greater pleasure, she had given him permission to take the apples. It did not take them long to gather these, and they were soon on their way.

Mrs. Graham was an old lady, very infirm, who lived near their house. She had outlived her husband and children, and a few months before her only grandchild had followed its parents to the grave. Almost blind, she depended entirely upon her friends to read to her. One of her favorite readers was Harry. He always appeared so bright and cheerful that she loved to have him with her. This afternoon she hailed his coming with more than usual pleasure.

"I am so glad to see you, Harry, and little Maggie, too. I have felt so lonely to-day, and it seems so long since you have been here."

"I know it, Mrs. Graham, but I couldn't help it."

"I don't blame you, Harry; I often think it is selfish to expect you to come; but you don't know what a comfort your coming is, and how anxiously I look for it."

How glad Harry was that he had resisted the temptation to go to the woods. Taking the old family Bible from the table, he asked where he should read.

"That's right, my boy, you always know what I want. Read where the mark is; I feel most like hearing that now."

It was a beautiful sight. The boy bending over the sacred page, reading in his clear, sweet tones the description of the heavenly world; the aged pilgrim on the verge of the kingdom drinking in eagerly the precious words.

"That will do now," said Mrs. Graham, at length. I don't want to tire you out; you have read a great deal. You don't know what pleasure you have given me. God bless you," she said, taking his hand in parting. And a blessing was with him that afternoon. He felt in his calm happiness. He would not have exchanged his feelings for a dozen afternoons in the woods.

Boys, girls, have you ever tried how much happiness is to be found in forgetting self and doing good to others? If not, it is time to learn.

The Six Crullers.

One day Frank was with his mother when she was making crullers. She was mixing the dough in a pan, but on the table were six crullers, fried to a rich brown, and looking very nice.

"May I have one of these?" asked Frank.

"No," said his mother. "I made a mistake and put in too much butter. They are too rich, and would make you sick. I am adding more milk and flour to the dough, and you shall have some of the new batch when they are fried."

But Frank was a little boy who never liked to wait for anything. He teased for the rich crullers until his mother sent him away.

Frank sat down under a tree and was sulky. He thought his mother had treated him very badly.

Then he saw her come out with the six crullers in her hands. She threw them on the grass, and called, "Chick! chick!" Then she went back into the house without seeing Frank.

The chickens came running from the barnyard, but Frank ran too. He picked up the crullers before the chickens had a chance to peck at them.

Mother didn't seem to be afraid these crullers would make the chikens sick," he thought, "and why should they hurt me?"

So he took a bite out of the largest cruller. It tasted so good that he kept on biting until the cruller was gone. Then he began on another, and did not stop until he had eaten all six.

"I don't feel a bit sick," he thought, as he ran off to play with his tame rabbit.

A couple of hours later Frank's mother went to the door with two of the crullers in her hand. One was a very fat soldier with a cocked hat on his head, and the other was a horse with a long mane. Frank was lying under a tree, and his mother thought him asleep.

"Wake up, Frank," she said. "Here are some fancy crullers for you."

But Frank did not answer, and when his mother went close to him she saw that he was very pale. She lifted him in her arms, carried him into the house and put him to bed.

He was very sick all night, and cried a great deal. The next day he was too weak to play. He lay on the sofa, and wished he had let the chickens eat those six crullers.

"Mother," he said, "I shall feel sure after this that you know best when you tell me not to eat anything."

"You have learned a very good lesson, Frank," said his mother.

And the lesson was such a severe one that it was several years before Frank could eat another cruller. He couldn't forget what he had suffered from eating the six he had taken from the chickens.

ADVENT.

Throughout the Christian world,
With banners half unfurled,
Expectant stand the multitude;
Hosannas yet unsung
Tremble on every tongue
With holy awe and reverent joy endued.
Above the belfry chime
Waits the appointed time
To herald forth the coming of His feet;
While sacred walls within
Are hung with living green,
Of life that never dies the emblem meet.
Soon shall appear the Dayspring from on high;
The darkness fades, behold! the dawn is nigh;
E'en now, o'er land and sea
The lessening shadows flee
Before the light along the Eastern sky,
In lines of gold and rose,
The promise glows,
Shall lips of listening choirs,
And bells in lofty spires,
Join the first Gloria of the angelic throng,
And not, O Heart, in thee
An answering melody
The music of the heavenly host prolong?
With holy zeal and love,
And works thy faith to prove,
Within thyself thy Bethlehem prepare;
Bring to His waiting shrine
The best of what is thine,
Thy gold and frankincense of praise and prayer:
So shall the truest, best fulfillment be
Of type and sign and ancient prophecy.
And when His burning Star
Shines in the East afar,
Rejoice with heart and voice, for unto thee,
On the glad Christmas morn,
Shall Christ be born.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

"Spiritual" Worship.

A writer in The New Haven Palladium says that not long ago he went to a certain church—where, it is not stated—to seek the spiritual consolation to be derived from the devout worship and praise of God, especially hoping to be lifted up to a higher life by the singing of some grand old hymn. Judging from his account he was apparently disappointed. "We had been sitting," he says, "in the richly upholstered pew and staring at the painted windows but a few moments when the organ suddenly hushed, and in a distant corner of the church four fashionably dressed ladies and gentlemen arose and sang. And this is what they sang: "God is a spirit; God is a spirit: and they that worship him, and they that worship him, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. God is a Spirit; and they that worship him; God is a Spirit; must worship him; they must; must worship; ship him; in spirit and in truth; for the Father seeketh such; (tenor) for the (all, loud) seeketh such, seeketh such, seeketh such to worship him. (Very softly) God is a spirit; (waxing louder) God is a spirit; and they; they that worship him; they; and they; they that worship him, must worship him, must worship him, and (loud, yelled) THEY that worship him; and they; must; that worship him (tenor, softly) must; (contralto) worship; (all) him in spirit and in truth; (all but tenor) for; (all) the Father seeketh such; (bass) seeketh such; (all, softly) to worship him, to worship; (sort o' dying away) in spirit and in tru-u-u-th.' As the concluding cadences softly died away among the vacant pews, like the 'still, small voice' among the cliffs of Sinai, we could not help wondering whether those much-tortured words had any meaning, and if so, whether that meaning had any application to the performance just ended. What is 'worship in spirit and in truth.'"

The Decrease of Missionaries.

The Advance has the following, which shows that missions are not as successful as they ought to be: "The Rev. Josiah Strong, secretary of the Ohio Home Missionary society, delivered an address to the students of Oberlin college, Jan. 11, on A Famine in the Ministry. He called attention to the fact that the demand for ministers for home missionary churches was pressing and increasing, while the number of men preparing for the ministry is constantly decreasing: 'One year ago the various home missionary fields asked for 200 men; to-day 400 are needed; nor is the demand confined to the missionary churches. Massachusetts alone has eight self-supporting churches not supplied with pastors, and knows not where to get them.' Then he refers to the foreign field, and says that the American board could use 300 or more ordained ministers to great advantage, making a total of 700 men now needed for home and foreign missions. Nor are we alone in this decrease of ministerial supply. The Presbyterian seminaries show very nearly the same decrease, and also the Episcopalian. The remedy, he says, must be in a powerful revival of religion in our colleges. The facts set forth are painfully true. The remedy proposed we believed to be the only one which will be effective. Pray for our colleges and for our young men that their education may be sanctified to the cause of Christ."

A Godless Philosophy.

The Archbishop of Paris in his Lenten pastoral speaks thus of the godless philosophy of the present day: "What strikes the mind of every attentive observer is the work now being attempted of constituting society without God. The wisdom and experience of ages had taught that no society could subsist if it did not acknowledge the authority of a supreme master and legislator, the source of all human authority and law. Modern society reposes on the doctrines of Christianity, and, in perpetual testimony of its origin, it dates the years of its existence from the birth of the Savior. Innovators, however, oblivious of the benefits effected by the gospel, ignoring the lessons of an experience as old as the human race, fancy they can banish from society all religious ideas. Their aim is, that no social institution and no public power shall bear the stamp of religious belief. The school is to be without God, and nothing in the asylums of the poor and afflicted is to recall the existence of a Father that knows their griefs and counts their sorrows. Neither is any affirmation of the immortality of the soul to shed on the sepulchres of the dead those rays of hope which console the saddest mournings."

The Royal Chaplains.

The London World has the following information about the royal chaplains: "The list of dignitaries, 'appointed to preach before the queen,' are signed by Earl Sydney, the lord steward, and not by the lord chamberlain, who really controls the royal chapels, in order to soothe the susceptibilities of those Protestants who regarded the appointment of a Roman Catholic as lord chamberlain as an outrage on decorum. In reality, the whole administration of the chapels is in the hands of the dean, the bishop of London, who arranges the list of preachers, and who receives a stipend of £200. Except in Lent, the pulpit at St. James' is filled by the chaplains-in-ordinary in rotation. The only real church duty of the lord chamberlain is occasionally to recommend clergymen as royal chaplains; but it is by no means a matter of course that his recommendations are attended to; in several cases of late years (for example, Canon Liddon, nominated by Lord Mount Edgecumbe) they have been decisively ignored."

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

Sow and look onward, upward,
Where the starry light appears,
Where, in spite of the coward's doubting,
Of your heart's trembling tears,
You shall reap in joy the harvest
You have sown to-day in tears.

Mr. Darwin was not regarded as a Christian; but he had the greatest respect for all that was good in Christianity, and was great enough to acknowledge it. This is the way in which he answered some shallow critics of foreign missionaries: "They forgot, or will not remember, that human sacrifices, and the power of an idolatrous priesthood; a system of profligacy unparalleled in any other part of the world; infanticide, a consequence of that system; bloody wars, where the conquerors spared neither women nor children—that all these have been abolished; and that dishonesty, intemperance and licentiousness have been greatly reduced by the introduction of Christianity. In a voyager to to get these things is base ingratitude; for should he chance to be at the point of shipwreck on some unknown coast, he will most devoutly pray that the lesson of the missionary may have extended thus far."

The number of Christian believers connected with the Ongole churches of the American Baptist mission at Telugu, India, is nearly 21,000; and the nominal Christian community is estimated at from 80,000 to 100,000. The baptisms, in 1882, from January to October, averaged not less than 200 a month. Thus work that was begun a few years ago, when thousands renounced heathenism and became Christians, has not suddenly stopped as it began, but is going on steadily. Those who are received are subjected to a careful examination, and although some of them may be expected to fall away, most of them will continue steadfast to the end.

It is said that the arrangements for the enthronement of the archbishop of Canterbury will be of a more complete character than on any previous occasion, and already the demand for tickets is very great. All the bishops who hold provincial offices, such as dean, chancellor and precentor of the province, are expected to be present. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise is to be sung in the cathedral in the evening. The archbishop of Canterbury will make his first state appearance in that character on Palm Sunday, March 18, when he is to preach at the Chapel Royal, St. James' palace.

Bishop Hare of Niobrara, who was sued for libel in this city last spring by the Rev. S. D. Hinman, one of his missionaries, has been spending some time in Philadelphia, where his father, the Rev. Dr. George E. Hare, lives. It is stated that the Philadelphia friends of Bishop Hare will raise the amount of the damages awarded to Mr. Hinman, in case the supreme court of this State confirms the decision of the lower court. Bishop Hare has uniformly declined to say anything about the matter since the trial.

The memorial statue of the martyr William Tyndale, the first translator of the New Testament into English, is about to be placed on the Thames Embankment, London. On the pedestal will be inscribed the names of about twenty, counties, towns, universities and societies in Great Britain, the colonies and the United States contributing to the expense. The statue, designed by Mr. J. E. Boehm, represents Tyndale in his doctor's robes, with his right hand on an open New Testament.

The Pall Mall Gazette arraigns the authorities of London for failing to protect the Salvation army from the attacks of the Skeleton army, which, it says, is composed of a "beggarly array of hobbledehoys, led by a 'prentice boy, just out of his teens, who but the other day left the ranks of the Salvation army to head the rabble of its assailants."

There is much speculation in regard to the election of a bishop to succeed Bishop Talbot of Indiana, recently deceased. The Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke, rector of Grace Episcopal church, Chicago, is prominently mentioned as a candidate.

The proposed memorials of the late archbishop of Canterbury are monuments in Canterbury cathedral and St. Paul's cathedral, a memorial in Westminster Abbey, and the restoration of the chapel of Lambeth palace.

Principal Tulloch has written a vigorous letter to the Pall Mall Gazette, in which he combats the opinion that the Scottish church will soon be disestablished.

More than £15,000 have been raised to endow the diocese of Southwell, which is to be erected out of the diocese of Litchfield in England.

The Wesleyan Methodists of England have expended nearly £5,000,000 in the erection of chapels during the last twenty-five years.

It is stated that Mr. Moody has been very successful in his evangelistic work in Oxford and Cambridge.

FACTS FOR THE FARMERS.

Silos and Ensilage.

A few weeks since the statement was made by the PIONEER PRESS "that Mr. C. Le Vescoute of Hastings was about to build a silo, and that many would watch his experiment with interest, as it would be the first one erected in the State. We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. J. N. Kelly of Owatonna, in which he makes the following correction:

I built a silo the past season, and I presume others in the State may have done the same. I put up 100 tons of ensilage last August and have now been feeding it to our dairy stock for three months with the most satisfactory results, and consider it the best and cheapest feed I have ever tried."

We are glad to make this correction, and happy also to lay before our readers the first of a series of articles from him on silos. It is safe to assume that but very few of our readers are thoroughly informed regarding them, and Mr. Kelly's articles will therefore be read with interest. He says:

At the request of many friends who are interested in the improvement and profitable development of agricultural matters, I have concluded to write a few short articles, giving a brief description of silos—the manner of building—the filling with green corn stalks, oats, barley or clover—the manner of pressing and weighting the ensilage—the condition in which it should come out of the silo, if properly preserved, and the value above the old method of curing the many kinds of fodder that all farmers are in the habit of putting up for the winter use of their stock. It seems now to be a settled fact that the creamery in Owatonna, will be ready for business the coming summer, under able management, with abundant capital to make the business a success. Farmers of our county will now naturally turn their attention to stock raising, and the production of milk. If farmers in New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and other Eastern States, with land worth $50 to $100 an acre, hay at $20 a ton, and corn, oats and millstuffs correspondingly high, can make money in stock and dairying, there is ample reason to believe our farmers can do the same with the many superior advantages our county possesses in keeping dairy stock. Farmers will now see the necessity of improving their stock. Many have already felt the importance of this, and have imported some of the most improved breeds of cattle, among which are the Durham, Holsteen and Jerseys. A cross of our native cows with either of the first two breeds, will insure a good-sized offspring with milking qualities, and a great improvement in beef-producing points above our native stock.

With a cross of this kind we shall have an animal of rapid and vigorous growth, better adapted to our climate and suited to our general wants in many respects than pure-bred stock. We must also turn our attention to care of stock in order to make dairying profitable. One of the most important points to the farmer in the stock and dairying business is, what is the cheapest and most profitable feed to provide for his stock during the winter months. Good hay is very necessary. Oats and corn or bran and shorts are indispensable in keeping milch cows in condition to milk profitably, as all dairymen will admit; but it is all dry feed, and butter and milk produced from it has not the sweet, agreeable flavor that it has in the summer, when produced from timothy or clover or other succulent food of equal value. Since the discovery made by M. Augustus Goffert in France in 1873, who fully demonstrated the fact to the satisfaction of all who saw it tried, it has been claimed that ensilage has the nutritive value of the grasses in their green state, and a recent analysis by several eminent chemists shows that all green food ensilaced is in better condition for stock than in its natural state, as it passes through a process in the silo that it naturally passes through in the animal's stomach; hence, they receive the benefit of the food earlier than when taken in the stomach green. In my next I will give a brief history of the discovery and adoption of ensilage in France, when first introduced into the United States, and my own experience with it.

J. N. KELLY.

Selecting Seed Corn.

Mr. Jonathan Talcott of Rome, N. Y., says a good many good things. Among the late items from his pen is an article in the Country Gentleman on Seed Corn. To the surprise of a good many, the assertion was made some weeks since by Mr. E. Lewis Sturtevant that the tip kernels of corn were the most valuable to plant, to which Mr. Talcott answers as follows:

I have farmed fifty years since I began for myself, and during that time I think there has not been a year that some experiment has not been tried, either in grain, grass, or vegetables, as also in cattle, sheep, horses and swine and fowls. While a boy, I was taught by my grandfather to select ears for seed well filled out at the tip, and never to discard any tip or butt kernels when shelling the corn for planting. His theory was that it required the grains from the whole ear to raise the best crop of corn in the greatest perfection. A neighbor of his said that the small kernels at the tip of the ear would not grow, consequently there would be a loss in the growing crop. This, my grandfather answered him, was not so, but the crop would be all the better for having them planted with the rest. I determined to test the case, and taking some quite small tip kernels, I planted them, and found to my satisfaction that they would grow, and nicely, too. I have ever since practiced this. In some instances the tip kernels are imperfect, or injured by birds; also, the butts may become water soaked before they are secured in the fall, so that some may not grow. In such cases, it would no doubt be best to reject such when discovered in time.

Thick or Thin Seeding.

There seems to be a wide divergence of opinion regarding the amount of wheat necessary to sow to the acre. Some good farmers still adhere to the old practice of a bushel and a half, while others equally good say that one bushel is a great plenty. We are of the opinion that the latter class have the better of the argument. A bushel and a half or a bushel and a peck of seed will not produce so plump a berry as when the roots have plenty of room to spread, which they do in thin seeding. It has been proven conclusively that it does not pay to crowd corn or garden vegetable, and that four stalks of the former in a hill are better than eight, and that they will bring a finer and larger crop. Even on a crop that will yield so abundantly and with so little care as field beans, experience has proven that thick planting brings a smaller return than thin, in quantity as well as quality. Cabbages, beets, all varieties of melons, etc, etc., grow better, produce more largely, and yield finer crops where ample space is allowed the roots to run. If this be true in the one case, why not in the other? If a cabbage needs room to develop into a big head, why should not the wheat plant, which sends out its little fibrous rootlets for several inches in every direction, seeking for nourishment and moisture? A bushel of seed to the acre makes a large, plump, handsome kernel and produces in the aggregate more bushels to the acre than will more seed—this is the result of a somewhat extended observation. If any of our readers have opinions to the contrary we should like to hear from them.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

The friends of the internal revenue department were also in speculation as to the new law. For the past eight months of the present fiscal year there has been a net increase of $608,475 over a similar period of the last fiscal year. By the passage of the internal revenue bill the collections will fall off before July 1 of this year. This decrease, it is thought, will amount to about $7,000,000, making the collections for the year about $140,000, instead of $146,000,000, as was the case last season. By the reduction of special tax, $2,000,000 will be saved to tax payers in the next four months, about $4,000,000 on tobacco, and about $500,000 on stamps. This reduction does not take place until May 1. A decrease in receipts will be made by the public using only so much of the taxable articles as are necessary, up to the time the new bill becomes a law.

The nomination of John M. Irwin of Keokuk as governor of Idaho has caused a good deal of surprise among members of the Iowa delegation. They he say he was appointed without consultation with any one in the delegation, not even his own representative, McCoid, nor the Iowa senators. It is believed he is an appointment of Frank Hatton. Mr. Irwin is about thirty five years of age. He has no special prominence in either national or state politics. He has served in the Iowa legislature.

Among other propositions which failed to reach the status of legislative enactments were: To forfeit land grants of Northern Pacific, Texas & Pacific, Atlantic & Pacific and other railroads; to reduce amounts paid land grant railroads for transportation of mails; to place Gen. Grant upon the retired list; to constitute a wife a competent witness against her husband in prosecutions for polygamy.

The estimated reduction of the bank taxes is about $3,000,000 if they are brought up to the passage of the bill, and $6,000,000 if dated back to the last assessment. The tobacco reduction is about $4,000,000.

Confirmations: Edward L. Curtis, secretary of Idaho; Edward Bellows, paymaster in the navy. Rejected postmasters: Theodore C. Hacker, Brownsville; Seth P. Mably, Grand Rapids, Neb.

The pre-emption repeal was left out and Dakota may breathe a sigh of relief.

RAILROAD NEWS NOTES.

Mr. W. H. Officer of the Austin, Mankato & St. Cloud road, states there is still $33,000 in bonds to raise to make the contract with the North American Construction company good. So soon as the whole amount is secured, preparations for building the road will begin. Work will be commenced at each end, and possibly at Mankato.

Gen. Rosser loses his verdict for $2,900 damages against the Canadian Pacific for malicious arrest and prosecution, Chief Justice Walbridge non-suiting him on the ground that the company had reasonable cause for their action.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

At La Crosse, Wis., Thursday night, Rev. G. Winkowitzk, of MapleWorks, Clark county, a guest of the International hotel, retired and blew out the gas. He left no order to be called, so he was not disturbed until the chambermaid went to attend to the room, when, finding the door still locked, she peeped through the keyhole and saw the man lying in bed looking like a corpse. At the same time she smelled gas. The door was forced open. The man's face was perfectly black, froth was oozing from the mouth and he breathed in convulsive gasps, followed by an interval of some seconds when he showed no signs of life. A doctor was summoned and spent most of the day with him and there is a possibility of his recovery.

Three men were killed, one fatally and others badly injured by the burning of the Dunlap elevator, and mill at Albany. The entire mill and elevator was destroyed. The property belonged to the estate of Robert Dunlap. Loss on building $75,000; insured $32,500. The mill and elevator were occupied by Frank Chamberlain. Loss about $100,000; insured $110,500. About 100,000 bushels of grain were in the elevator. The loss of the parties who had the grain stored is about $40,000; insurance not ascertained.

At Palace skating rink, Duluth, Miss Lena Pastore, while skating, was knocked down by some man passing her. It was thought at the time that she was a little hurt, as she got up and skated off the ice. After reaching her home she suffered terribly. Physicians were called when it was discovered that her spine was injured to such an extent that there is little hope of her recovery.

The Methodist church at South Englewood, Ill., burned last night.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF

A Sandwich, Ill., dispatch says: "The people of the Latter Day Saints' church here have advices from Lamoni, Iowa, where they have a large community, that Lawrence Conover, who has had charge of the funds of the church, has disappeared, leaving strong evidences of defalcation against him. Conover went to Leon, drew $1,000 of the church money out of the bank there, and left for parts unknown. Conover has a wife and two children, whom he left behind. The amount of the deficiency is from $3,000 to $5,000.

The largest shipment of live stock this winter, consisting of 711 cattle and 1,570 sheep, has been landed at Birkenhead by the steamer Victoria from Boston. The animals are in a healthy condition. Sixteen sheep died on the passage but not one of the cattle was lost. Eleven lambs born during the voyage were also landed.

CRIMES AND CRIMINALS.

A London correspondent of the Freeman's Journal asserts that a warrant has actually been issued for the arrest of the man known as No. 1, copies of which have been sent to Liverpool and Birmingham. The correspondent adds: "England has no option but to apply to the French and American governments respectively for the extradition of Byrne and Sheridan. If the foreign states think that they can justly and prudently withhold the alleged murderers or instigators of murder from trial the responsibility is primarily theirs."

Harvey N. Fallansbee, clerk of the Boston police department and treasurer of the police relief association, has embezzled some $20,700 of the invested funds of the latter organization. He has been speculating in stocks. He made a full confession, and was held for trial in $5,000 bail. Fallansbee was appointed a patrolman in 1868, and for twelve years has been in the superintendent's office. He has been treasurer of the relief association since its organization in 1871.

E. W. Hassler, a reporter on the Cleveland Leader, is missing, and with him $1,600 belonging to his wife, whom he left with only $2. Hassler is quite young, and has been married less than three years, in which time he is said to run through considerable property his wife brought him.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

The London Pall Mall Gazette says: When Russia wished Europe to refuse an asylum to nihilists the Austrian Fremderblatt declared that such a demand would give Europe a right to ask Russia to terminate the regime which produced nihilism. It would be unpleasant if the United States government addressed a similar suggestion to Lord Granville, for foreign secretary. If the demand for the extradition of Sheridan is based solely on the fact of his belonging to the Invincibles, it stands exactly on the same footing as if Russia had asked for the surrender of Prince Krapotkine. Not even success in securing the surrender of Sheridan would atone for abandonment of the position with regard to extradition which we have hitherto maintained in favor of Europe. It would be even worse if the position were abandoned only to obtain a humiliating rebuke.

Smalley's London Cable: In reference to the extradition of Sheridan, it considered here that the American government, while certain to refuse, as England also would, the demand for a political refugee, will not interpose technical difficulties where the offense is either murder or conspiracy to murder, albeit the latter is not expressly included in treaty. Whether the application will be passed depends upon the amount of evidence which the British government is able to adduce. Public opinion here would not support a demand based solely on James Carey's testimony, but if a legal presumption of Sheridan's guilt be established it is confidently expected that he will be surrendered. The best proof of the fairness of the trial which he would have in Ireland is the utter collapse of Mr. Parnell's and all other charges against the Dublin tribunals.

The London Law Times, in an article on the application for extradition of Sheridan, points out that a proviso excluding perpetrators of political crimes from extradition does not occur in the Ashburton treaty. It says it does not include murder, and by a decision rendered in New York, the crime of murder includes being accessory thereto. The question is strictly a legal one. The Law Times says: "The utmost charge that can be brought against Sheridan is conspiracy to murder, and his offense, therefore, is not within the strict terms of the treaty; but the United States has discretionary power in the matter."

The produce of the Dominion fisheries for the last year is valued at $16,088,075. The value of the fish exported from Canada for the fiscal year is $8,863,884. When the Amended Revenue Act Takes Effect.

In reply to inquiries the commissioner of internal revenue says the effect of the law reducing the internal revenue taxation will be as follows:

That the taxes upon capital and deposits of banks and bankers and national banking associations are repealed from this date, except such taxes as are now due and payable; that the reduction of the tax upon checks, drafts, etc., and upon matches, perfumery, medicinal preparations and other articles, imposed by schedule as following Sec. 437, Revised Statutes, takes effect July 1, 1883; that after May 1, 1883, the tax on manufactured tobacco and snuff will be 8 cents per pound, on cigars $3 per 1,000; and on cigarettes 50 cents per 1,000; that there will be a rebate on tobacco, snuff, cigars and cigarettes of the difference in the taxes recently imposed and the taxes now provide for, where the claims amount to $10. These claims must be presented within sixty days from May 1. Regulations upon this matter will be immediately issued, and blanks furnished upon which claims can be made. That the law provides for a large reduction in special taxes upon dealers, commencing May 1, 1883.

The commissioner also states that immediate arrangements will be made for changing the form of special tax-stamps and stamps for the payment of taxes upon tobacco, snuff, cigars, etc., so as to supply collectors with these stamps in time to meet the requirements of trade prior to May 1, 1883.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS

Wednesday, February 28.

SENATE.—Senator Garland moved to reconsider the action of last evening by which the senate consented to the appointment of the conferees. He claimed that the senate was being trifled with by the house and duped by a petty resort to jugglery. Senator Sherman attempted to dissuade him from such a notion; but he was so thoroughly incensed at the imaginary wrong that he would not listen to mollification.

Senator Morrill moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, which was lost by vote of 24 to 26. It began to look squally for the conference, but here Ingalls stepped in, and after some words, intended to soften Garland, he offered his resolution providing that the conference should be complete and untrammeled, and that should the conferees find that the house conferees had been hampered by instruction that would prevent free consideration of the subject, the former should withdraw and report the fact to the senate.

After a little further asseveration of his belief on the part of Garland that the house did not intend to deal fairly in the matter, he accepted Ingall's resolution, and withdrew his motion to reconsider. So all was lovely again.

The senate, after the morning hour, took up the bill to give a $10 pension to all soldiers who had lost an arm or a leg. After a debate, which lasted until 10 o'clock to-night they passed, by a vote of 27 to 14, a substitute offered by Mr. Platt reducing the amount to $30.

The president sent to the senate the following nominations:

Thomas M. Kirkpatrick, collector internal revenue Eleventh district, Indiana; George W. Post, collector internal revenue, district of Nebraska. Collectors of customs: William G. Malone, district of Petersburg, Va.; William Hartstuff, district of Huron, Mich. Surveyors of customs: George Frazee, Burlington, Iowa; Robert Armstrong, Dubuque, Iowa; James M. Meek, United States attorney, Eastern district Tennessee; Richard Root, United States marshal, Southern district, Iowa; George N. Tilman, United States marshal Middle district, Tennessee; Daniel W. Gooch, pension agent, Boston.

HOUSE.—The house put in the day on the river and harbor bill, and took a recess until night for the purpose of completing it. The bill was not taken up, however, this morning until after being antagonized by the general deficiency bill.

In the contest the river and harbor bill came out ahead, exhibiting enough strength to carry it through the house. The bill was then debated over two hours in a general way the discussion bringing to the front the chronic objections to river and harbor appropriations.

Mr. Burrows of Michigan, who was chairman of the committee, spoke in support of the report, and he was followed by Mr. Robinson of Massachusetts and Mr. Thomas of Illinois. The latter made a very vigorous speech in behalf of the improvement, and charged the opposition to the influence of the railroads.

There was a long wrangle over the committee of conference on the tariff bill.

Thursday, March 1.

SENATE.—Mr. Bayard withdrew from the conference committee on the tariff bill and also Mr. Beck. Many other democratic senators were elected to fill their places but all declined, and the president appointed Mahone and McDill.

The president appointed as a committee to inquire into the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river, Logan, Jones (Nev.), McMillan, Jonas and Walker; as visitors to West Point, Cameron (Wis.) and Harris; and as visitors to the naval academy, Lapham and Camden.

The president laid before the senate a communication from the secretary of the interior, announcing the completion of the list of pensions, with their addresses, rates of pensions, etc.

Mr. Anthony said it would cost over $30,000 to print the document. The senate resumed consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. The provision for the payment of "old settler" or Western Cherokee Indian claims, reported from the committee, was struck out.

Mr. Vest offered an amendment to the paragraph appropriating $40,000 for the protection and improvement of Yellowstone Park, providing for a superintendent, at a salary of $2,000, and ten assistants at $900 each, to be appointed by the secretary of the interior to reside continuously in the park, and to have the duty of protecting game, timber and other objects of interest; the balance to be expended in the construction of suitable roads and bridges, under the direction of an engineer officer to be detailed by the secretary of war. Adopted. The committee having reported a provision authorizing the secretary of the interior to lease, for not more than ten years, small tracts, not exceeding eighty acres, for the erection of hotels, etc., Vest moved to reduce the amount of land in one tract to ten acres. Agreed to. Vest offered another amendment providing that not more than ten acres shall be leased to any one person or corporation, and no tract be leased within one and one-fourth miles of any of the geysers, or Yellowstone falls. Agreed to.

The senate in executive session confirmed the following:

Civil service commissioners: Dorman B. Eaton, New York; John M. Gregory, Illinois; L. D. Thoman, Ohio. Joseph F. Decarricarte, United States consul at Caruna. Collectors of customs: William Hartshoff, Huron, Mich.; William G. Malone, Petersburg, Va. Surveyors of customs: James M. Rocheval, Nashville, Tenn.; Robert Armstrong, Dubuque, Iowa; George Frazle, Burlington, Iowa. Registers of the land office: Chester B. Darral, at New Orleans; Moses Gringager, Washington, Minn.; Daniel H. Freemen, St. Cloud, Minn.; R. L. Walter, Wichita, Kns; Homer L. Pound, Hailey, Idaho; C. F. Williams, Watertown, Dakota; E. L. Smith, the Dalles, Oreg. Receivers of public moneys; John Ulrich, La Crosse, Wis.; E. O. Geary, Fargo, Dak.; S. Waters Hailey, F. M. Joy, Bozeman, Mont.; M. H. Smith, Lewiston Idaho; A. O. Marsh, Vancouver, Wash. T.; J. G. Pillsbury, Oregon City, Oreg. Oscar Henrich, principal clerk of the public surveys in general land office.

Postmasters: F. J. M. Wolser, Tama City, Iowa; A. H. Hamilton, Ottumwa, Iowa; W. Craddock, Knoxville, Iowa; Noah N. Tyner, Fargo, Dak.

HOUSE.—The river and harbor bill occupied the whole day and night. Every item developed opposition, and, in the discussion of pro forma amendments the enemies of the bill deferred action.

Their purpose evidently is to defeat the bill by making it impossible to have it considered in the senate. Among the amendments was the striking out of the clause appropriating $15,000 for improving St. Anthony falls in Minnesota. Gen. Washburn himself consented to have it stricken out. When the paragraph was reached, Mr. Flower of New York, seemingly in retaliation upon Mr. Washburn for his charge last night that all the clamor with regard to the river and harbor bill had been instituted in the city only in the interest of the great trunk railroads, insinuated that Mr. Washburn was personally interested in the improvement of St. Anthony Falls. So Mr. Washburn, rather than rest under this imputation, moved to strike the clause from the bill. Although numerous amendments were offered to the bill, very few of them were adopted. Most of the day's session was occupied in considering the appropriations for the improvements of the Mississippi river. The entire appropriations provided for this purpose amount to $1,250,000. In the evening there were several disgraceful scenes, very nearly resulting in personal collisions.

Friday, March 2.

SENATE.—A resolution was adopted for a special committee to investigate the condition of the Sioux on their reservation.

It was resolved to elect a president pro tem. Saturday noon.

The conference report on the army bill was adopted.

Mr. Van Wyck gave the department of justice a scathing review for extravagant compensation of the star-route attorneys. In support of his allegations he quoted from vouchers and other papers furnished by the treasury department, and when he had finished moved their reference to the judiciary committee, which was carried.

The report of the tariff conference committee was received. After a very sharp debate Saturday at 12:30 a. m., the ayes and noes were called. There was so much confusion that the proceedings could hardly be followed from the gallery. David Davis voted with the republicans and Van Wyck with the democrats. Cameron of Pennsylvania announced that he had a pair with Hampton, who he was informed would vote the same way as he would, so he voted no. This created quite a sensation as the report was beaten, but Mr. McPherson, a democrat who had declined to vote, at once voted aye with the Republicans to offset Cameron. This made it a tie.

Ingalls rose at the last moment and voted aye, carrying the concurrence by a majority of one. The report was accordingly agreed to by a vote of 32 to 31. All the conferees had signed the report, except Sherman, McKinley and Carlisle. In executive sessions the senate conformed the following nominations:

John M. Irwin, Keokuk, Iowa, governor of Idaho; Martin P. Kennard, assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston; Marcelon R. Ledet, Louisiana, United States consul at Turin. Registers of lands: B. M. Thomas, Tuscon, Ariz. T. Joseph Jorgens, Walla Walla, Washington Ter. United States attorneys: Elihu Root, southern district of New York; W. H. Dewit, Territory of Montana, Edward Waddell, eastern district of Virginia; A. C. Tate, United States mashal for eastern district of New York. Robert J. Fisher, Chicago, examiner in chief of the patent office. Surveyor of customs; J. N. Benedict, district of New York. C. K. Graham, naval officer at New York. Andrew J. Perry, appraiser of merchandise at New York. Merritt Wickham, assistant appraiser of merchandise at New York. Indian agents; George S. Davenport, Sac and Fox agency, Iowa; Pedro Sanchez, Pueblo, N. Mex. Thomas M. Kirkpatrick, collector of internal revenue Eleventh district of Indiana.

HOUSE.—In the house to-day there was little speech making, and a great deal of voting. The appropriation bills being out of the way, the house turned its attention to the disposition of business on the various calendars.

Under the operation of the Pound rule, a large number of measures were put through.

A dozen bills, more or less important, were considered, and either passed or rejected.

The senate amendments to the sundry civil bill were non-concurred in.

A conference report on the postoffice bill was adopted and the bill passed. It retains the $185,000 item for special mail facilities, but does not limit compensation to subsidized railroads. The bill to readjust the salaries of postmasters passed. In the Sessinghaus-Frost contested election case (Missouri) the contestant was declared entitled to the seat—126 to 110.

Saturday, March 3.

SENATE.—Mr. Windom presented the credentials of his successor, Mr. Sabin, elected senator from Minnesota.

The bill readjusting postmasters' salaries passed.

David Davis resigned the presidency pro tempore of the senate, and Mr. Edmunds was elected and took the oath as his successor. Both gentlemen made appropriate remarks.

Mr. McMillian, from the committee on commerce made a report on the river and harbor bill, stating that owing to want of time to examine and consider properly numerous items in the bill, they did not feel justified in recommending passage. On the other hand, in view of the great importance of the annual appropriations for the improvement of the waterways of the country as a protection against the oppressive exactions of railroad companies, the committee did not feel justified in retaining the bill in their possession and thus preventing action by the senate, and therefore reported back for such action as the senate might deem proper. The bill was then killed by being tabled for the day, on motion of Mr. Ingalls.

The deficiency bill passed.

Disagreement of the conference committee on the sundry civil bill was reported.

The house bill creating three new land districts in Dakota passed, as did the shipping bill.

The bill creating St. Vincent a port of entry, instead of Pembina, which had gone through the house, passed.

The tax and tariff bill was received from the house.

The president of the senate immediately signed it, and a few minutes later President Arthur affixed his signature. The bill is now therefore a law.

The house bill to amend the revised statutes so as not to exclude retired army officers from holding civil offices in the Territories was passed.

At 2:40 a. m., on motion of Rollins the senate went into executive session and conformed the following nominations:

John Paul, U. S. district judge, Western district of Virginia; David V. Stephenson, surveyor general for Iowa and Nebraska; James B. Edmonds, commissioner for the District of Columbia; Albert G. Edwards, assistant treasurer United States, St. Louis, Mo.; P. F. Menning, assistant treasurer. United States, New Orleans. Receivers of public money—Charles D. Peck, Lake City, Col.; S. Parker, Niobrara; Eggleston, United States attorney, Northern district of Ohio; G. W. Post, collector internal revenue, Nebraska. Register of lands; B. H. Dodge, Concordia, Kans; John Bissell, Kerwin, Kans; R. Everett, pension agent, Pittsburg; E. O. Graves chief examiner of the United States civil service commission; J. B. Battelle, collector of customs, District of Miami, Ohio; Lew Morrill, supervisors of customs, Michigan City, Ind. Postmasters; L. M. Atherton, Page, Iowa; A. R. Grow, Logan, Iowa; E. G. Butts, Stillwater, Minn.; C. C. Powning, surveyor general, Nevada. Max Polachek, United States consul at Zanzibar. Receivers of Public Moneys: Charles F. Babcock, at McCooks, Nebr.; Morris Marks, New Orleans; Thomas H. Rooney, Walla Walla, Wash. Register of Lands: Christopher Hostetter, Grand Island, Neb.; G. L. Laws, at McCooks, Neb.; Joseph Bookwalter, collector of customs, district of Minnesota; C. C. Pawning, surveyor general, Nevada; George Drury, collector internal revenue, district of Louisiana.

After the executive session, the senate took a recess until 10 a. m. (Sunday.)

On Morrill's motion the committee on finance was ordered to prepare a compilation and index of existing tariff laws, together with tabulated comparative statements of rates of duties and imports under the several tariff acts since the organization of the government, and such other statistics on the subject as it may deem proper.

On motion of Mr. Anthony a resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee to wait upon the president and inform him that congress had completed his business and was ready to adjourn. The president appointed Anthony and Bayard.

At 11:45 Anthony and Bayard the senate committee appointed to wait upon the president, reported that they had performed the duty assigned them, and that the president had stated that he had no further communication to make congress.

The president pro tem., assuming that the president of the United States had signed the sundry civil appropriation bill, appointed as senate members of the commission provided for in that bill to inquire into the compensation, etc., of the officers and employes of both houses and report to the next congress, Messrs. Platt, Cameron of Wisconsin, and Cockrell. Precisely at 12 o'clock, President pro tem. Edmunds brought down his gavel and said: "Senators, The hour has arrived at which, by the constitution and laws of the United States, the Forty-seventh congress terminates. I wish each one of you a pleasant and safe journey to your homes, and felicity in your future lives. The senate stands adjourned without day." [Applause.]

HOUSE.—The contested election case of Cook vs. Cutts (Iowa) was settled in favor of the contestant, who took his seat and was sworn. Mr. Kelly submitted the report of the tariff conference committee.

A debate followed, Mr. Kelly opening it and Mr. Carlisle making an elaborate argument against the report.

Mr. Dunnell avowed himself in a strait. He was compelled to vote for the bill, and yet he yielded to the conclusion with the utmost reluctancy. It was no such a bill as the American people had a right to expect, or which the interests of the people had clearly and unmistakably demanded. The bill did not meet his approbation, and yet because of some of its provisions he would vote for it, but only under the most solemn protest. If the Republican house had had the courage, the pluck, the manhood, to take $25,000,000 off of sugar and $10,000,000 off of steel rails at the last session they would not be here to-day witnessing the incoming of a democratic administration of the house.

The report was finally adopted and the bill passed 152 to 115. An analysis of the votes shows that the republican members, except Messrs. Bayne, Brumm, Campbell, Dawes, Everett, Fort, Hazeltine, Hubbell, McKinley, Miller, Bryce, T. M. Rice, S. Robinson, E. B. Taylor, J. D. Taylor and Urner voted for the report, and the democratic members, except Messrs. Bliss, Ermentrout, Hardenburgh, Hardy, Harris, Ladd, Morse, Mitchler, Randall, Ross, Scoville, Wilson, George D. Wise, and Morgan R. Wise voted against it.

The majority in the house was much larger than was anticipated. In the early part of the day there was a good deal of doubt about the passage of the bill and many members declared the house would not sustain it. Many protectionists asserted they would not vote for the bill under any circumstances, but some of these were not strong enough to resist the popular demand for some reduction of taxation now; so when the vote was taken, they recorded their names for the bill.

Gen. Washburn said that it was a great victory for the republicans and gave them an important advantage in politics. While the bill did not suit in many respects, he voted for it because it was the best thing he could do in the direction of reduction and revision. This view is entertained by a majority of western and northwestern men. Maj. Strait seemed very much pleased that the matter was out of the way, and expressed satisfaction at the result, although it did not go as far in the desired direction as he could have wished.

Then the deadlock upon the election case continued until 4 o'clock, when Hiscock presented the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill. The house recedes from its disagreement to the senate amendment, which strikes from the bill the provision for the repeal of the pre-emption laws and ratification of the Sioux treaty. The report was agreed to. Hiscock introduced a joint resolution appropriating $20,000 for the alteration of internal revenue dies, plates, stamps, and for blanks for claims for rebates, which passed.

The usual scenes attendant on an all night session was enacted. Though the galleries were practically vacant the attendance on the floor was good, and members lounged back in their chairs and smoked, and told stories and laughed to their hearts content.

Shortly after 6 o'clock Mr. Robinson rose and called attention to the hour. This congress was making a record before the country, and a record in history. He thought everybody would agree with him that too much whisky had been taken out of bond already [shouts of laughter]. It was in the interest of good order and good government that the house take a recess for three hours in order to avoid any difficulty, any personal controversy, and in order to avoid any false attitude before the country.

At 6:30 the house took a recess until 9:30. The usual vote of compliments to the speaker was passed with some obligation.

In the course of the forenoon Knott, stating that his congressional career would in an hour and a half close forever, applied to the courtesy and magnanimity of members to let him have the poor privilege of a vote on a bill in which the people of his congressional district and state were profoundly interested.

"What bill is it?" asked his colleague, White.

"It is bill such a number," Knott replied.

"What!" exclaimed White, in a tone of surprise and horror. "The whisky bill, and on Sunday! Never, Never! [Loud laughter.] I call for the regular order."

At 11.30 Mr. Reese offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the house has just heard, with the deepest sorrow of the death of Hon. Alex. H. Stephens, governor of Georgia, and so long a useful and distinguished member of this house; that this house express their heartfelt sympathy with the people, not only of Georgia, but with the people of the whole country in the loss of the statesman and patriot.

On motion, a committee to wait on the president and inform him that congress was ready to adjourn was ordered, and this committee was appointed.

At 11.55 the committee to wait on the president reported that he had no further communication to make to congress and soon after the house adjourned.

Senator Van Wyck of Nebraska on Judicial Extravagance.

Washington Special: Senator Van Wyck furnished the amusement and sensation of Friday afternoon by his arraignment of Atty. Gen. Brewster for the fees allowed George Bliss and others as counsel in the star route proceedings. The arraignment was scathing and denunciating to the last degree. He created much amusement by reading the items of traveling expenses, among which was sixty cents fee to the sleeping car porter. The senator thought that if the United States was to be charged with Mr. Bliss' fee to the porter it should have been made genteel and put at $1. Changing from the comical aspect of the case, he held up such proceedings on the part of the attorney general as scandalous and an outrage upon decency and common honesty. The senator declared that here was a conspiracy of lawyers to filch the treasury as bold and dishonest as the crimes with which the star route defendants were charged. It looked as though they would, carry their robberies quite as far he wanted the public to know what kind of an administration of justice they were getting. No wonder the trial lasted 108 days. Not only George Bliss, but Mr. Merrick also, he said he had a voucher for $15,000 approved by "Brewster, Brewster, there is the name," repeated Van Wick, holding the document aloft. He too, of course, wanted the trial to last as long as possible. Then, too, a member of congress (Crowley) had been allowed $6,000 for special services. All robbing and thieving and plunder. No wonder there was a hung jury. It was the proper thing to keep a trial that paid each of the attorney $150 a day going forever. Such a villainous and outrageous administration of justice had rarely been witnessed. Don Cameron rose angrily, and without addressing the chair, shook his long finger under Van Wyck's nose and said: "You had better stop this. You have said enough. You, nor no other man, can say anything dishonest of that man. He never got any money." All the while Van Wyck was blandly smiling the most tantalizing smile that ever lit up his face. It was more than Cameron could stand, and he sat down disgusted. Edmunds tried to unhorse Van Wyck, but he too fell before that smile, and then Van Wyck had the whole matter referred to Edmund's committee.

CARRY THEIR ROBBERIES QUITE AS FAR

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Wednesday, February 28.

Senator Wilson introduced resolutions which were adopted for the appointment of a committee of five to thoroughly investigate the public institutions.

The senate passed Cole's license bill by a vote of 25 to 18.

The senate concurred in the house amendment fixing future term of state auditor at four years instead of two; also an amendment fixing number of associate justices at four.

Armed with his credentials, which senate engrossing clerk had elaborately and calligraphically adorned, United States Senator D. M. Sabin appeared in the chamber by request and Senator S. B. Gilfillan rose, and pointing to a very handsomely framed aggregation of legislative portraits, purchased by contributions from senators and representatives, presented the same to M. Sabin, who said: "This life is made up largely of little surprises. We often experience that the highest sweets are made up of the little social amenities which we encounter from day to day. For lo these many years our senator-elect has lived among us and his growth, socially and officially, is best evidenced by the position he now holds. He is about to leave us for his broader sphere of action and his associates have seen fit to ask his acceptance of a slight token of their appreciation of his worth and have asked me to present this group of legislative portraits. As the years go on may you read in each face the approval for deeds well done."

A vast number of bills, mostly local were past.

House, Wednesday, February 28.

The Hicks high license bill was voted down and the following by Mr. Cole was passed in its stead. The bill proposes simply to amend the existing license law, as follows:

Section 1. Sec. 2. Chap. 16 of General Statutes of 1878 is hereby amended by striking out in the third line of said section the words: "Not greater than $100 nor less than $25," and inserting in lieu therefore the words, not greater than $500 nor less than $200. Provided, that in towns, cities or villages containing less than 2,000 inhabitants, the license shall not be less than $100.

Sec. 2. The provision of said Chap. 16 shall extend to and be in force in all the cities and villages of the states, anything in the charter of any such city or village to the contrary notwithstanding, except that application for license shall be granted by the common councils of said city or village and the license money paid to the treasurer thereof.

Later the bill passed the senate. Shortly after 11 o'clock the business in the house was interrupted by Speaker Fletcher, who was on the floor, with the statement that Mr. Sabin had received a telegram, calling him to Washington, and that he was to leave on the noon train. He asked that the senator-elect be accorded the privilege of saying a few words to the members of the house.

Mr. Sabin came to the front of the hall, immediately in front of the clerk's desk and bade the members a graceful farewell and members, officers and friends pressed about to shake hands with Senator elect Sabin, that gentlemen not forgetting in his individual adieus even the pages.

The proceedings following consisted in simply calling the roll over and over again on the passage of bills until the hour for adjournment.

Senate, Thursday, March 1.

The session lasted until long after midnight the usual dodge of turning back the clock was played as usual. Bills considered all right were passed at the rate of one every three minutes or faster, while measures of doubtful excellence or apparent unadvisability were indefinitely postponed in thirty seconds or less.

The largest and hardest fight was on the Duluth and Iron Range Railroad bill which finally passed.

The senate killed the bill providing for the doing of a general insurance business of mutual companies with $25,000 capital.

The bill to lengthen the time of residence in state to secure the franchise from four months to one year was tabled.

The bill to tax sleeping car companies, introduced in the senate by Senator Clarke, was passed by the upper house by a vote of 32 to 3, despite the motion of the introducer to lay it on the table.

The bill to reduce the fees of the inspector of oils one-half was indefinitely postponed by the senate in committee of the whole.

On report of the finance committee a whole grist of bridge bills were indefinitely postponed.

The bill allowing corporations to increase the value of their shares from $50 to $100 passed both houses. Shares, under this law, can now be placed on Wall street—impossible before, when their par value was but $50.

Among the lost bills were the following one:

Amending Chap. 20 General Statutes 1878, relating to the preservation of game and to attach additional section to be numbered 35.

The senate passed the bill proposing an amendment to the constitution for the exemption from taxation of church parsonages—yeas, 35, nays, 33.

House, Thursday, March 1.

This body sat until three a. m., Friday, the hands of the clock being turned back. A host of bills were passed, and a very large number of senate and house bills were not reached and consequently are among the dead ducks. Bills at all suspicious in character were indefinitely postponed, and numbers of measures that under other circumstances would have met with favorable action went down in the crush.

Gov. Hubbard sent in his second veto yesterday, anent the Princeton & Anoka swamp land grant act. On the question shall the bill be passed despite the veto of the governor, there were 51 to 50, so the motion did not prevail.

Mr. Collins, of the temperance committee, made an attempt to report the compromise temperance bill adopted by the senate, but it was found necessary to suspend the rules, and the requisite number of votes could not be secured. A motion so to do stood 39 in favor and 32 against.

During the evening, a gold headed cane was presented to Speaker Fletcher; a gold watch to Mr. Howard, chief clerk; a gold headed cane to Mr. Deacon, assistant clerk; and a watch fob and charm to Mr. Wade the colored postmaster.

The anti-gambling bill was lost, Mr. Grimshaw saying that it was tainted with favoritism, and did not include the worst forms of gambling dealing in options church lotteries and Col. King's annual fair. Mr. J. E. Child said it was no reason because the bill did not include everything that it should be killed.

The Ledyard free high school bill was indefinitely postponed in the senate as not calculated to aid the cause of education.

The general impression has been that comparatively few bills had been passed during this session of the legislature which now closes, but a recapitulation of the bills passed dispels this idea. Upward of 1,000 bills were introduced, of which, up to the close of the all night session, about half had become laws. Of those passed the larger number are special acts. Some 300 special acts passed. The general laws outside of general appropriation number 150 in round numbers. Fifty odd bridge appropriations were ordered, and a score of bills passed for general appropriations. Thirty-one bills relating to St. Paul and Ramsey county passed, while Hennepin county and Minneapolis asked legislation to the extent of twenty-five bills.

Senate, Friday, March 2.—Last Day.

The senate was not very prompt in assembling at 10 a. m., when adjournment had been taken scarce six hours before. By 10:30 there were enough for the transaction of the little business possible to do.

Senator Billson moved that the journal be so amended as to show the celebrated house file No. 10 (the Iron Range extension) was passed by the senate after 3 o'clock on the morning of March 2. The motion was lost.

The resolution giving the elective officers of the senate mileage was passed, and the clerks of the enrolling and engrossing committees were also awarded mileage.

The senate then went into executive session, which lasted ten minutes, in which a long list of notaries public were confirmed, and also the appointment of Henry Poehler on the state board of equalization.

Eulogistic resolutions of the State Senator McLaughlin were adopted.

The following resolution was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the thanks of the senate are hereby tendered to the lieutenant governor, secretary and other officers of the senate for their uniform courtesy and urbanity, and accommodating disposition in the performance of their duties during the session which has just closed.

The lieutenant governor made a fitting reply, and having signed all the bills presented him, a few minutes before 1, the senate of the legislature of the state of Minnesota, in its twenty-third session, was declared adjourned, and the gavel fell with a resounding clash on the desk to be used officially no more until 1885—unless cruel fate should make an extra session necessary.

House, Friday, March 2.

Before conducting the usual devotions Chaplain McDana made a few remarks, acknowledging courtesies, etc.

The resolution granting the members postage in the sum of $10 was passed.

A resolution was adopted to pay L. A. Normandy $200 for services during the session.

Assistant Clerk Deiken was voted $150 for transcribing the records of the last session.

A gold headed cane was presented to James Smith, jr., the "father of the house," with appropriate speeches by Speaker Fletcher and Mr. Smith.

The group picture of the members of the legislature, handsomely framed, was brought to the desk of the clerk, and Mr. Hartley called for Frank H. Dayton, the sergeant-at-arms, and presented it to that gentleman on behalf of the speaker, the members, the clerks, and pages of the house, Mr. Dayton responding briefly.

The usual vote of thanks was extended to the speaker.

Bogus resolutions, more or less humorous in character followed, the speaker pro tem, contributing a large part of the cause for merriment by his good-natured decisions and queer way of stating things.

For an hour or more the house gave itself up to the usual closing day fun, interrupted by matters of detail business.

The committee appointed to wait on the governor reported that his excellency had nothing more to communicate to the house. Soon after the house adjourned sine die.

Red Wing's Big Blaze.

Between the hours of 12 m. and 1 a. m. on Sunday morning last, a most disastrous fire visited the prosperous and growing city of Red Wing. It was discovered nearly simultaneously in the third floor of the Diamond mill and fourth story of the Bluff mill, both belonging to the Red Wing Mill company. The fire spared nothing until it had left the two mills, two warehouses, a bran house, an engine room, together with contents, totally destroyed—a mass of rubbish, the walls ruined to such an extent that they cannot be utilized for rebuilding—the greatest loss by fire Red Wing ever experienced since its history commenced. The mills had a combined capacity for 1,000 barrels per day when running, and employ sixty workmen; who are now thrown out of employment. The loss is estimated at $200,000; insurance $150,000. In both mills it started in a purifier, and how it originated there was a mystery, unless it be the work of an incendiary. Both of these mills, including the old Ives warehouse, a bran room and saw mill, are owned by the Red Wing mill company, of which E. L. Baker is president, superintendent, and principal stockholder; F. B. Howe is treasurer and E. B. Pulteo secretary. The capital stock of the corporation is $250,000.

The New Custom Collector of Minnesota.

Mr. Joseph Bookwalter has been appointed and confirmed collector of customs for the Minnesota district, to succeed Ephriam McMurtie, the present incumbent. His nomination to the position, it is understood, was made at the request of Senator Sabin, between whom and Mr. Bookwalter a warm friendship has existed for a period of many years. He is a resident of Blue Earth county, representing that county in the lower house of the state legislature session before last, when he was esteemed as a young man of exceptional ability, and at present serving in the capacity of deputy to the gentleman whom he has succeeded. The appointment of Mr. Bookwalter was the result of entire cordiality of sentiment on the subject between Senators McMillan and Sabin, and as far as is now known meets the approbation of leading friends of both senators. Collector Bookwalter is an Ohio man, and was born in Ross county in 1850, where Rev. Isaac Bookwalter, his father, was in charge of a pastorate. When Joseph was fourteen years old he came with his parents to Vernon Center, Blue Earth county, Minnesota.

The Minnesota State Fair.

R. C. Judson, secretary of the State Fair association, informed a reporter that it had been decided to hold the State Fair this year the first week in September, in order to form a circuit with the Wisconsin and Illinois fairs, which are to be held the second and third weeks respectively. By this arrangement a much finer display of stock and everything else may be expected. Propositions from different towns for the location of the fair will be received up to April 1, communications to be addressed to the secretary at Farmington. Under the new law, all county and district fair and stock associations are obliged to submit their itemized reports to the state secretary before March 10 (instead of July 1, as heretofore), to entitle them to their share of the appropriation, which was increased to $6,000 by the last legislature. The board of directors of the state association will hold a meeting early in April and select the place of holding the fair, and made announcement as soon as possible.

Certain documents certifying the sale of 78,000 acres of land in Pipestone county, by the southern Minnesota road, have been filed with the state auditor. This shows a very material increase in the taxable property of the road, as they had but 20,000 acres of land on the assessment roll last year.

Patrick Harris of Shieldville, Rice county, was driving home from Kilkenny, and was struck by a passing train, while crossing the Minneapolis & St Louis track. He was looking at a snow plow that had just passed, and did not see the coming train in time to save himself.

Burton, appointed by board of commissioners to fill the remaining time of Mr. Rice's term, the funds in his hands, amounting to $156,925.94. During the five years of Mr. Rice's incumbency, the aggregated receipts of this office have amounted to more than $3,000,000, every cent of which sum has been correctly accounted for.

People and Travel.

Minneapolis Journal: Travel on the ilroads centering in Minneapolis is nparatively light at present. There e very few people going east or south d the bulk of the travel is by people o are returning to Minneapolis from road, and by people from the east who e seeking new homes in the Northwest. The arrivals of the latter class are ore numerous than is wont to be the se at this time of the year, which indicates that there will be a large increase the new settlers of Minnesota and akota during 1883.

Mr. Chris Steenerson had the misfortune to freeze the fingers of his left hand last week, and he was obliged to submit to the amputation of the same on Tuesday. Drs. Lankester and Bordman removed them.

One of Fisher's distinguished early settlers has struck luck. Charley Bellus left Fisher last fall to join the Greenleafs out on the Northern Pacific construction. Charley wandered to the new silver diggings, found a claim, and sold it for $7,500.

The irrepressible Ole Olson has enlisted another liberal minded townsman, Joe Roberton, in his public benefactions. When Olson moves into the store building prepared for him, Roberton will open his new hall to the public. Then, about the 9th instant, the two propose giving their friends a free dance and supper, with genuine western hospitality.

The citizens of the towns of Tynsid, Bygland, Roame and Fisher, are circulating a petition to be presented to the Board of County Commissioners, asking for the laying out of a county road from the southwest quarter of sec. 34, town of Fisher, on a direct line to the Red River, on the town line between the towns of Fisher, Roame, Bygland and Tynsid. Also, asking for the abandonment of the old county road between Frog Point and the Red Lake River; the same being impracticable and wrongfully laid, it running almost the entire distance, diagonally through each section. Now if there is any one great want in this country it is good roads; and this road will be a great benefit to every farmer in those towns. Turn out ye citizens of Bygland, Tynsid, Roame and Fisher! Do not rest until you have a good high, dry and well built road from the Red River to the clear waters of the Red Lake.

On Saturday morning last at about 10 o'clock, the imposing building known as the Red Lake Flouring Mills was discovered to be on fire. The flames were seen shooting through the roof near the chimney. An alarm brought active aid and the fire was put out, as supposed, and this well built, well equipped mill, containing all modern devices for manufacturing flour, that had cost its owners nearly $30,000 was saved from destruction. During the day and following evening men were employed in and about the mill, all could smell smoke, but nothing indicating fire was discovered. At night, one of the proprietors or his sons, made hourly visits to the mill untill two or half past two o'clock Sunday morning, the smell of smoke continuing, but it was thought to have been caused by the morning blaze. No other signs of fire were visible until about half past three Sunday morning, when the mill suddenly became a mass of devouring flames, and the valuable property, the pride of the whole country, was doomed for destruction. Nothing was saved, and a smouldering ruin, alone, marks the spot where stood the most complete flouring mill in the Red River Valley.

The mill was built by Thompson & Slichter some three or four years ago, at a cost of $17,000. On the death of Mr. Slichter, Mr. Thompson became the owner of the whole, but soon sold a half interest to Willard B. Roberts. This firm disposed of a third interest to W. H. Otis, a practical miller, and at the time of the fire the firm stood as Thompson, Roberts & Otis. During Mr. Otis' connection with the mill a great deal of money has been expended for modern flour making devices and improvements, and at the time of its destruction, it contained both the burr and roller process, and was considered the best equipped milling property north of Minneapolis. Three hundred and fifty sacks of flour and about one thousand bushels of wheat were included in the loss. The insurance was with the following companies:

Mercantile, Cleveland	$2,000
Merchants & Traders, N. Y.	1,000
Hamburg, Bremen, Germany	1,500
Amason, Cincinnati	1,000
Western, Toronto	2,500
Orient, Hartford	2,000
Home, N. Y.	2,000
Alliance, N. Y.	2,000
Star, N. Y.	1,080
On stock:
Underwriters, N. Y.	3,000

Another mill will take its place, but it is not probable that so large a sum of money will be invested in the enterprise, unless outside parties join the enterprise.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Mr. J. F. Peterson, of Crookston, has purchased a couple of lots on Crocker, Cundy & Nelson's addition, and will proceed at once with the erection of a butcher shop. He is at present engaged in putting up ice to use in his business.

Mr. W. M. Box, son of the notorious Wm. Box of Crookston was in town last week building a double breasted mansion on his father's claim adjoining this town. He says his father will be here in a few days to establish his residence among us.

A mysterious individual by the name of Carter, has been in town for the past few days, and has aroused a good deal of curiosity. He has a full outfit of surveyors instruments etc., and has been taking levels, and measuring the river in different places. He asks plenty of questions, but answers none. It is supposed that he is here in the interest of the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad, but nothing definate is known. He says he intends going to Red Lake when he gets through his business here.

Mr. Morse arrived in town the beginning of the week and has had a large force of men under the supervision of Mr. Ackerlund of Crookston at work upon his bank building which is already well under way. Mr. M. intends occupying the present building only temporally. Just so soon as he can procure brick, he will build a band which will compare favorably with any in the county.

East Grand Forks Facts.

A. C. Rhinehart of Norway, stopped at the Lewis this week.

No. 1 hard quoted at 96 cents; oats, 50 cents; corn, firm at $1.

N. P. Stone and lady, of Crookston, visited in town Tuesday, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Howes.

The Crookston train stuck in a snow drift west of Grand Forks and was delayed about an hour Tuesday.

Several of the boys viewed the country from the top of the elevator Monday, and it is indeed, a grand sight.

Mr. Freemire informs us that he has received more wheat at the elevator the part week than during any previous week since he assumed control.

Every day we see parties on our streets trying to rent houses, and owing to the insufficiency of residences they are compelled to turn away disappointed.

It is promised by the management of the Grand Forks & Duluth railroad that they will put 2,500 men to grading early in the spring, and it is quite certain that the road will be built.

A letter from E. F. Masterson, dated at Watertown, Wis., says that the 1st of April will see the greatest rush to the Red River Valley, and East Grand Forks, especially, that was ever known.

Tuesday as C. O. Nash was crossing the track at Washington Avenue his horse became frightened at a freight car standing near the crossing and making a sudden spring to one side upset the cutter. Mr. Nash naturally enough stepped (?) out and retaining a firm hold of the lines, was dragged as far as the postoffice, where he succeeded in stopping the horse. No damage.

Wm. Jackson informs us that he has about completed arrangements whereby he will commence the erection of a foundry early in June, in company with a gentleman by the name of DeLaney. He has secured six lots in Traill's addition for that purpose, and says it will undoubtedly be built. It will employ not a few skilled mechanics and as they will move here with their families it will be quite an item for our town.

BELTRAMI, March 1, 1883.

Editor Polk County Journal:

The beaming countenance of our popular young merchant, Wallace Kimberly, and the astonishing liberality with which he treated our boys to a superior brand of cigars is accounted for by the arrival of a young lady who came last Wednesday to remain permanently. Father and child doing well.

Our country round about is noted for its healthfulness at present, not a case of sickness being known in the neighborhood.

The sleighing is excellent.

The noted jockey, H. B. Budd, trader in horseflesh, oxen and seed wheat, having done all possible in that line in this community, has this day gone to Aldal to ply his vocation. More anon.

TELLY-PHONE.

Grand Forks Herald: Considerable amusement was afforded the passengers on the train from Crookston yesterday. When within about two miles of East Grand Forks, a cutter occupied by two men was met, who were driving along the road that runs parallel with the railroad track. On the approach of the train, the horse took fright, and making a sudden shy threw both farmers out, and started on a mad run across the prairie; the driver hanging to the reins, was towed through the snow for several rods, resembling the tail of a comet. He finally let go and the horse being free from check, dashed along at a speed that would distance a Derby winner. It at last encountered a snow drift that could not be floundered through in his struggles, and was thrown. As the train passed on, no further sport could be furnished from that quarter. The men looked like Skandinavians.

COMBINATION BUGGY GEAR. WITH LONGITUDINAL SPRING.

The Combination Buggy, (cash price at factory, $100,) of which the above cut represents the Gear, has become known as the very best for easy riding and durable qualities. Years of most trying use, in private and in livery, has abundantly proved this fact. These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the torsional strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds to the elasticity of the springs producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—steel tires and axles, trimmings of neverfading cloth or fancy leather.

The folks of Stephen are indebted to Mr. Ed Bivens of the firm of Bivens and McMahon, for a splendid sleigh ride to the farm of Wheeler and Culbertsan where a social hop was given by the boys of the farm. St. Paul Dispatch: The vigilance of Senator Steenerson, while occupying the chair a few days since, and which was the subject of facetious, though not derogatory comment in the Dispatch at the time, has been vindicated and endorsed. Some House bills, incorporating villages, and clearly unconstitutional on their face, came before the Senate, and were about to pass under a suspension of the rules without any attention being specially directed to them. Senator Steenerson, from the chair, pointed out their "bad" features and they were referred to the judiciary committee, which has since reported adversely, which report the Senate has sustained. The action of the presiding officer pro tem. looked a little odd at the time, but it was eminently proper under the circumstances, and Senator Steenerson, who has achieved an enviable reputation among his colleagues during the session, modestly considers himself endorsed.

"World Smashing."

World-smashing, Meteoric Astronomy, and Lunar Volcanoes, are the thrilling subjects discussed by W. M. Williams in No. 12 of the Elzevir Library, Price two cents! Nervously inclined readers will be glad to know that the author is conservative, and claims that science demonstrates, not the early destruction of the universe, but quite the contrary. These three essays are from a handsome large volume by the same author and publisher, issued under the title of "Science in Short chapters," in which are treated something more than two-score topics of popular interest, many of them being practical rather than simply curious. The importer's price of $3.50 is reduced by the American publisher to 50 cents for handsome cloth binding, or 65 cents for half Russia, red edges, though the American edition is fairly equal to the importer's. For sale by all booksellers, and by club agents. John B. Alden, publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

Williams; "The Motive and Habit of Reading," by Richardson; at seven cents each; Macaulay's famous sketch of "Frederick the Great," and Shakespeare's "Hamlet;" at three cents, two handsome illustrated numbers for young people, one containing three ballads by Mrs. Alden, and the other "A Half Hour in Natural History," by Prof. Peabody; at ten cents, we have Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," complete, large type, with five illustrations, and are promised soon Dickens' famous "Cricket on the Hearth," with several fine illustrations. For sale by booksellers; a club agent wanted in every neighborhood. John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

County News.

Red Lake Falls Doings.

From the Messenger.

Mr. Swain, of Perham, was it town last week and invested in some Red Lake Fall's dirt.

Talk about dogs, but Jos. Grover has two that "take the cake." They are only six months old and one weighs ninety-five pounds and the other one and three-fourths pounds.

While in Crookston last week we visited the Merchants Bank, and through the courtesy of the gentlemanly cashier, Mr. Ross, were shown through the institution, and with its fire-proof vault and burgular-proof safe, we think the depositors of that bank need feel nothing but perfect safety.

Mr. C. L. Brainard, county surveyor, has the material ready and will commence in the erection immediately of a building 18x30, two stories high, on block 44 facing Fifth Street. The lower portion will be used by Mr. Brainard as an office and the upper story will be for rent for dwelling purposes.

Mr. H. A. Nolan, who has charge of the building of the new piers on the Clearwater, wishes to contract for 200 loads of stone at once, with which to construct them. Those who wish to make bids for furnishing the same can learn full particulars by calling at Mr. Kretzschmar's office.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Charlie Robbecke is now a happy man. His wife and family arrived on Thursday last.

The Robbecke & Williams House will hereafter labor under the appropriate title of the "Headquarters Hotel."

Six loads of lumber for Rauson's drug store arrived on Friday last Mr R. is expected up here this week to oversee the erection of his building.

pretty quick work has been done on the new bank building. It was only commenced about a week ago and is now almost completed. Mr. Morse expects his large safe in this week and will soon be ready for business.

If some doctor don't locate here pretty soon we will hang out a shingle ourselves. There is a large and lucrative practice for some enterprising M. D., and now that the drug store is being started here his services seem almost indispensible.

Since the above was in type we have received word that Dr. M. H. Sly, of Eyota, Minn. is making preparations to come up about the 20th of this month and locate among us. The doctor was here some time ago and is known to many of our citizens.

Quite a large crowd of people attended the services held in Palmer & Johnson's office on Sunday last. The services were conducted by the Rev. R. M. Millard, Northwestern S. S. Missionary, of Glyndon, and were very interesting. At the conclusion of the morning service a Sunday school was organized with 37 members and the following officers: Supt., R. H. Aimer; Asst Supt., R. R. Bramsness; Sec.-Treas., Mrs. G. H. Palmer; Librarian, Chas Rapp. A considerable sum of money was contributed toward procuring a library and other material for the school will be known as the St. Hilaire Union Sunday School, and will hold its first meeting at the residence of Mr. H. H. Garrison, on Sunday afternoon next at two o'clock.

Manitoba Free Press.

Vennor's weather Bulletin for March, contains the following in reference to the weather for the current month.

"At this period of the year we generally from our first early impressions respecting the probabilities of the approaching spring, summer and autumn months, and these, we may place on record in the Bulletin for the purpose of future comparison; simply promising that they are our version of "the probabilities" for the term specified.

Spring.—April, advanced warmth towards middle of month and favorable rains. Colder towards closing days and entry of May. May will enter cold and white and continue so through first half of month, with snow falls and cold rains. Brief periods of summer warmth.

Summer.—June is likely to be a warm Summer month and similar to that of last year. In fact the whole of the coming Summer will probably follow in the track of last year's weather conditions. Somewhat severe relapses to cold weather and frost may occur in parts of July and August.

Autumn.—After advanced cold weather and snow falls in October and November, the Autumn of the year is likely to remain unusually open and fine up to a late date with general scarcity of snow in nearly all sections through December and probably much of January (1884.) Our present view is that the Autumn of the present year will much resemble that of the year 1875, in the various sections of the country.

THE STORMS OF MARCH.

March will enter with rains and blow,
But the 3d and 4th will give cold and snow,
The 10th and 11th will bring storms again,
At some points snow, at others rain;
St. Patrick, too, will have his storm,
Commencing from the early morn;
The 24th and 25th will do their best
To put all previous storms to test,
While 27th and 31st with angry roar,
Proclaim that March is going—gone once more.

MARCH STORMS DATES.

The following are the most probable dates of the usual March storms, which we think this year likely to partake of the severity of the month of January to a certain extent. The chief or most general storms we are inclined to place in the latter half of the month. The Northwest division is more particularly treated of in a special and separate forecast further on in the paper.

1st.—A decided storm and bluster, with snow and in some sections rain, (Maritime Provinces.) The storm will extend southward to Washington, D. C.

3d and 4th.—General heavy storms. Chicago and West blockaded, also Nova Scotia. This storm will probably be likewise experienced in Great Britain, with snow.

10th to 12th.—Very general and severe snow storms and blockades, extending far to Westward. Rains and snow falls Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Tremendous snow drifts in Western States.

17th to 20th.—General heavy snow and rain storms south to New York and Washington. Snow blockades again west. On 20th or 21st great wind storm at New York.

27th.—Another general storm period. Snow and rains. Newfoundland snowblocked.

30th and 31st.—General snow, wind and rain storms. Heavy blow and rains New York and Middle States and seaboard. Snow and rain storms Maritime Provinces.

The month will be one of the stormiest experienced in a long period of years, and there is a probability of great destruction of life and property. The storm period of the 10th to 12th will undoubtedly be severe and wide spread, but the heavy rain and wind storms of the 27th to 30th may cause the greatest harm, particularly towards New York and middle sea board.

BIG STORMS IN MARCH.

The 17th (St. Patrick's Day) will give a great snowstorm in Canada, and throughout a large part of the northern, middle and western states. Railroads will in all likelihood be again badly blocked on both 17th and 18th dates. The week commencing Sunday, the 25th, will be full of storm, wind, snow, sleet and rain, according to locality. On the 27th, very stormy in Maritime Provinces, and particularly in Newfoundland, where the snowfall will be very heavy, obstructing all travel. The 30th and 31st are again dates of storm, and either one of these, or the 27th, is likely to give the great storm of the month.

PROBABILITIES FOR THE NORTHWEST.

3d or 4th.—Snow storms and blizzards at Winnipeg and generally through Manitoba.

5th to 10th.—Generally cold weather, and blizzards, Manitoba.

11th to 18th.—High winds and gales with rains or snow falls towards and after 15th.

20th and 21st.—Generally stormy weather.

22d and 23d.—Northwesterly gales and much cold weather.

24th 25th.—Snow blockades Northern Pacific R. R., and general blizzards and storms, Manitoba, with very cold weather and gales.

26th and 27th.—Storms continue through Northwest.

30th and 31.—Very cold and tempestuous weather continuing, possibly moderating in last day of month to milder and calmer weather for a brief period.

Note.—Altogether a very stormy and wintry month.

FARM NOTES.

Minnesota Tribune.

PREPARING FOR SPRING WORK.

The season of the year is at hand when the farmers should be preparing fo spring work. We do not expect nor look for a very early spring, nor do we think from present appearances that we shall have an unusually late one. The farmers must remember that the snow in early winter came before the ground was frozen to a very great depth, and just as soon as the snow disappears the soil will be ready for different varieties of seed, such as wheat, oats and barley. It is important to be all ready when the seed time comes to go right to work in the fields. This is the time to get ready or that event. No farmer should be obliged to leave the farm for a moment during seeding time. He cannot afford to do so. By making the necessary preparations beforehand he will not have to. His seed, his tools, his provisions, his teams, his hired help, his wood, should all be on hand. Late years has established the fact that early sowed wheat, oats, rye and barley make a greater yield than when sowed late in the season.

CHANGING SEED WHEAT.

Before it is too late, we wish to reiterate what we have frequently said before—that it is important that our wheat growers should change their seed as often as every other year. By some strange law of nature seed that is raised in the same field or on the same farm, if sowed year after year, will not produce a full crop, but will soon run out. It is an excellent plan to procure seed that was raised in a neighboring county or State. A few years since, Gov. John S Pillsbury of Minnesota sent to Manitoba for a few car loads of Scotch Fife wheat, He disposed of the seed at actual cost to such farmers as called for it. The result was a greatly increased yield to every farmer who purchased it. We know of a good many other instances where the yield of wheat has been almost doubled by using seed that was raised in distant localities from where it was sowed. We have doubt but what the coming year will be a good wheat season. We think so from the fact of the large deposit of snow, which is frequently called the poor man's manure. Snow contains small quantities of ammonia, a valuable fertilizer, which is distributed all over the surface. If we are to sow wheat, let the seed be of the choicest quality; and if possible do not use that which has been produced for years on the same fields, or on the same farm, which is to be occupied with wheat this year. If the farmer cannot secure it from more distant parts let him exchange with his neighbors residing in other and adjoining towns.

We wish to state, farmers, that we shall keep on hand constantly a full line of flour and feed, meats, provisions etc, and a full line of staple and fancy groceries. Call and see us.

Chris Steenerson was in the city this week. He is getting along nicely.

John McLean left for St. Paul on Monday night. Will be gone eight or ten days.

Lem Nobles, of Grand Forks, is in the city. He says he intends to remove to this city shortly.

The snow is going off gradually and the indications are that we shall not have a very healthy freshet.

Cheap John has sold out his stock and gone below after another lot. He will be around again in a few days.

Call and examine Charlie Davis' wall paper. He has a large and lovely stock in every style, shade and price.

Wm. Saul, of Fairfax left for his old home in Wabasha County on Thursday. He does not expect to live there always.

McKinnon Brothers are making a neat baker's wagon for Chas Truax. It will be completed and on the road in a few days.

Mr. Wm. Anglim has arrived from his visit to Canada. He reports lots of snow out there but saw none coming through Michigan.

Dan McKinnon intends to fix up his restaurant in fine shape and is now prepared to dish up a square meal at a moment's notice.

Charlie Davis is a genius. He has invented a little business expressly for the purpose of showing his fine samples of wall paper and borders.

See notices of farms to rent or sell elsewhere, and if you wish to lease or buy a farm upon very favorable terms call at the JOURNAL office.

Mr. Lee Halstead, representing James Pamperin, cigar manufacturer, La Crosse, Wis., was in the city on Saturday taking large orders for the celebrated Acorn cigars.

Mr. O. Osmundson, of Mallory, was in the city and paid the JOURNAL a visit of profit to both. He reports farmers encouraged at prospects of good times and big crops.

A large stock of wall paper and borders at Charlie Davis', corner of Main and Second streets. [46-49]

G. W. Truax reports that he killed a whopping big mosquito one day last week. He says that he has slaughtered the daddy of mosquitos and predicts a scarcity this summer of that excellent fruit.

Mr. Frank Lombard was in the city on Tuesday. He informed us that he has erected a saw mill on the Clearwater River about 12 miles above Red Lake Falls and that he intends to put up a grist mill this summer.

Charlie Davis has moved his building out into the street preparatory to building a large store, 25x60, two stories high. Charlie finds his present quarters entirely inadequate to accommodate his growing trade.

The Wiggins storm did not materialize to any alarming extent in this vicinity. On Friday a good healthy blizzard was inaugurated and enjoyed itself heartily but that was all. Saturday and Sunday were mild and spring like.

Henry Steege informed a JOURNAL reporter that he has bought Theodore Greenhalgh's place, siturted on the Red Lake Falls road about three miles from the city. He intends to make a stock farm of it. Thirty dollars per acre was the price paid.

Our old Becker County friend F. E Wood, was in the city over Sabbath with his friends here. He left on Monday for Neche, where he is engaged as telegraph operater. F. E. thinks there is only one city in the Northwest quite equal to Crookston—Detroit—for its handsome girls, ranking next, in his mind.

Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Page went to Fargo on Wednesday, March 7th and later in the week a telegram announced the illness of Mrs. Page which prevented Mr. Page's arrival in time to occupy his pulpit. It is expected that he will arrive in time to conduct the services at the Congregational church as usual on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ole Bang have again been called to mourn the loss of a child, their remaining one a little girl, having died early on Friday morning. Thus in a few weeks have they been bereft of their children—a bright active little boy and a lovely little girl the joy and comfort of their hearts. They have the deepest sympathy of their many friends in this community.

Mr. Chas. Truax has his bakery in running order and a nice large sign "The Valley Bakery" tells the hungry wayfarer where he can find something nice to eat. We have sampled Charlie's wares and know them to be extra nice. He will have a baker's cart on the streets in a short time and be ready to supply his customers with home made bread of all kinds, pies, cakes baked beans and everything in the bakery line.

The Hammond & Sheldon Madison Square Company will open at Ericsson's Hall on Saturday evening in the celebrated play "Led Astray." This company is composed of the members of the old Carver Company which appeared in our city a short time since and are worthy of a grand reception. Tickets for sale at Tom Morris Palace Jewelry Store. Fail not to hear this excellent company and then kick yourselves forever after.

Mr. Clark Van Housen, of Prattsburgh, Steuben Co., N. Y., having heard the fame of the great Red River Valley, arrived on Monday's train for the purpose of verifying the report. He will look the ground thoroughly over, and, if satisfied, will locate here. He comes prepared to make investments in whatever appears the best opportunity. So far he is well pleased with our new Northwest with its wealth of cheap broad fertile acres and its grains and business enterprise. [illegible]

Again the Water Works Save the City.

Our citizens were awakened from their quiet slumbers on Saturday night by the wild alarums of the clanging fire-bell which spoke of fire and devastation. Soon the fire company was on deck, armed and equipped as the law directs and ready to go where danger and duty called which the same was found in a little barn belonging to W. O. Wilson, back of Peake's harness shop which barn being partly filled with hay was blazing away at a great rate. The hose was quickly in position and the water of the Red Lake River was rushing rapidly to the rescue which so discouraged the fire that it died ere yet its mission was fairly commenced. It takes a pretty active, determined kind of fire and lots of it to live in the face of such a deluge is poured upon it from the river via the city water works. Thus, again, have the citizens of Crookston reason to feel proud of their water works for having saved a fearful conflagration. The fire was in a splendid place to get in its work and doubtless many thousands dollars worth of property would have been destroyed.

Fred Fox came in on Tuesday for Dr. Van Dyke to go out and see his little boy who, he feared was threatened with diptheria. The doctor found the boy struggling with a good healthy cold.

M. E. Church Lyceum.

The entertainment for Tuesday evening consisted of a debate the subject being "Resolved that no person has a moral right to use tobacco. Mr. A. M. Childs assisted by Judge Montague and Mr. Bode argued the affirmative and Messrs. John Leo, Robert Stanton, Wm. Watts the negative. The subject was handled in a masterly manner, the discussion of he use of the "weed" eliciting many pithy and humorous sayings which were highly appreciated by the large audience present. At the next meeting a miscellaneous entertainment is to be furnished a part of which will consist of music, reading by John Watts, declamation by T. S. Smith, address by Dr. Watts. What is called a bat exercise will be given which is supposed to be both instructive and amusing as it will draw out many short extemporaneous speeches.

Don't forget the old Carver Company on Saturday evening next at Ericsson's Hall.

St. Patrick's Ball.

You are all cordially invited to attend a grand ball to be held at Ericsson's Hall on Friday evening March 16th 1883. Good music has been secured and a good time is anticipated. Tickets $1.00. Supper extra.

A Strange Scene and an Extraordinary Shot.

MAPLE BAY, Minn., Feb. 28, 1883.

On Saturday last, Feb. 24th, at about three o'clock in the morning, as Mr. T. J. West and wife were going from Maple Lake to Dr. Cable's residence, a large horned owl was seen to rise from the bushes on the side of the road, flying low and heavily as if borne down by some extra weight. At the same time a dark object was observed by Mr. West in the owl's tallons, apparently alive and in a struggle with the owl. Mr. West took from the sleigh a Remington rifle and, as soon as the owl lit in the road, some 60 yards distant, fired at the bird, which fell over dead. But the strange part of the story remains to be told. When Mr. West came to pick up the owl he found a large brown mink, as well as the owl, and both dead, the bullet having cut the mink's throat and gone through the owl, instantly putting an end to the combat, which, unknown to Mr. West, was going on between the mink and the owl.

CONUNDRUM.

Now, which was it? Did the owl catch the mink or the mink catch the owl? It was very plain that neither could let go.

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.

DID HE PROPOSE.

"I couldn't do it," said Martin Ellerslie, with a shudder. It was just the seductive hour before the gas-jets are lighted and window blinds turned down—the delicious twilight, when grate fires shine like burning masses of ruby, and people sitting beside them grow strictly confidential. It was snowing a little outside; all the better; for the click of the crystalized pearl against the glass filled up the silence, and made the cozy warmth of the room luxuriously delightful. And Martin Ellerslie's brown eyes fixed full on the fire, saw—no one can tell what or how much they saw!

"Suppose she should say no," he burst out; seemingly apropos to nothing at all.

"Suppose she shouldn't," observed Guy Barnes, dryly.

"I tell you, old fellow, it's just exactly like having a tooth pulled out. Your friends stand by and say: 'Be a man; it's nothing.' It's not they who are under the doctor's forceps."

"Complimentary to Miss Clen."

"Nonsense. You know what I mean. But, really and truly, I've tried and I can't do it."

"Very well," said Barnes indifferently, "then it is an understood thing that you are to live and die an old bachelor."

"I didn't say that."

"Oh, I beg pardon. You expect Fanny is going to propose to you, that's it."

"You are a heartless miscreant," Ellerslie cried out, half laughing, half impatient, as he sprang to his feet, and tossed the remnant of his cigar into the fire, "and I shall not waste any more time upon you—unless indeed you go round to the fair with me."

"Where Fanny Clen has a stand? Not if I know it! The money market is rather tight for me at present, and these fancy fairs are no more than a den of robbers, where a defenseless young man is concerned."

And Martin Ellerslie went on his way alone.

The hall was all a glitter of gas-lights and fragrant with flowers when he got there. The pretty feminine sparks lurked each behind her table, well laden, were all smiles and dimples, while the throng of victims ebbed and flowed around them.

Mr. Ellerslie found himself greeted with acclamations.

"You will take a share, Mr. Ellerslie?"

"Do please put your name down here Mr. Ellerslie; there are only ten blanks left."

"Oh, Mr. Ellerslie; you are the very one we are waiting for. I have kept seven for you—seven is always a lucky number."

"Mr. Ellerslie! don't pray, spend all your money till you have taken a share in this mammoth doll, with a trunk full of clothes."

And thus our hero was flung hither and yon on the waves of the fair, drawing nearer, however, with every subscription to the table over which shone the blue stars of Fanny Clen's eyes.

But when he got there he was smitten with sudden silence.

Fanny looked wonderingly up.

"It's a fine evening," he hazarded.

"Is it?" asked Fanny; "why I thought it was snowing."

"So it is," said our hero, growing very red, and overturning with his elbow a crimson Venetian flask, for which he immediately had to pay a sovereign. "I—I mean it isn't a very fine evening."

"Oh!" said Fanny.

"Yes," said Martin, feeling acutely that he had made a donkey of himself.

Then he went away and didn't see Fanny Clen again the whole evening—probably because she was the only person in the whole room he cared a fig about seeing at all. But so unkind is fate to lovers,

Just as he was edging his way out of the place, in a very desperate and dejected frame of mind, there was a rush and a flutter, and he heard his own name called in all the notes of the human gamut.

"What is it?" he asked vaguely staring around him.

"You've drawn the big doll!" cried little Sibyl Percy, dancing up to him and laying in his arms the huge waxen abomination, with the flossy yellow curls and imposing pink and white complexion; while somebody else brought the little and big bandbox. "It's just like traveling with a wife," said Sibyl, mischievously.

"But what the—ahem, what am I to do with it?" asked our bewildered hero.

"Give it to somebody," said Sibyl, inwardly hoping he would act promptly on the suggestion and bestow the prize upon her. "Any one would be delighted to see such a present."

"Do you think they would?" asked Mr. Ellerslie, vacantly, and he went away.

"Great stupid fellow!" cried Sibyl, spitefully, and she tripped back to the table.

"I never saw such a goose," said Laura Barrington, who had three sisters of her own at home

"But what am I to do with it?" said Martin to himself, as he traversed the wintry gloom of the midnight streets.

"Oh, I have it! I'll give it to Fanny Clen and she can make a Christmas present of it to her black-eyed cousin."

He laid the doll, rejoicing, on the sofa, and went to the bed, sinking into dreamland just about the time that Fanny Clen was taking the hair-pins out of her magnificent golden hair before the dressing bureau in her own apartment.

"Why, Fanny, what ails you?" cried Dora, her elder sister. "You are crying."

"I am so tired," guiltily confessed poor Fanny.

And she wept herself to sleep, thinking how foolish she had been, and that of course Martin Ellerslie didn't care a straw about her. Why should he?

Mr. Ellerslie rose the next morning full of his momentous resolve, and made such a toilet that the landlady's little boy, seeing him go out with a big doll, neatly incased in her pasteboard box, under his arm, elected profanely:

"Oh, my eye, what a swell!"

The black-eyed little cousin admitted him. Yes, cousin Fanny was at home—would he walk into the parlor?

And our hero, before he had fairly made up his mind in what terms to bestow his gift, found himself bowing and smiling to a fair-haired vision in a sunny little room surrounded by heaps of cut flowers.

"How do you do, Mr. Ellerslie?" said Fanny, coloring and smilin. "I am making bouquets, you see, for to-night."

"Exactly so," said Martin, and then he reflected how much more appropriate a remark he might have made, and turned very red.

"Pray sit down," said Fanny,

"I—I—the fact is, Miss Clen," said Mr Ellerslie, plunging in sheer desperation into the midst of his subject; "I have called—I hope you won't be vexed—you have only to say so if you don't like it."

Fanny dropped her sprig of heliotrope and looked up in surprise.

"I know it isn't of much consequence," went on Martin, turning the pasteboard box round and round in confusion, "but if you'll accept—I've known and esteemed so long, and—"

The damask rose deepened on Fanny's fair face. It had come, at last, then, the proposal she had anticipated so long and anxiously.

"Not of much consequence! Oh, Mr Ellerslie," she repeated, reproachfully.

"Would you care for it?" he demanded, quite oblivious, in the embarrassment of the moment, that he hadn't even named the gift.

"Care for it?" the tears sparkled in Fanny's eyes. "When you know I love you, Martin."

And she ran into the arms of our astonished hero.

When he went down the door-steps he was an engaged man, how and when he hardly knew himself. And, as fate would have it, the first personage against whom he tumbled was Guy Barnes.

"Hello," said Guy. "What's up?"

"Don't speak so loud," said Ellerslie, passing his arm through that of his friend. "She's engaged to be my wife."

"Who is? The divine Fanny, the fairest of her sex?"

"Of course; who else should it be?"

"But I thought you couldn't screw your courage up to the proposing mark?"

"I didn't propose."

Guy Barnes started.

"You—didn't—propose! Then how could she have accepted you?"

"That's just what I can't comprehend myself!" said the puzzled lover. "We are engaged—that's certain—but I can't for the life of me remember when or how I proposed."

"But of course you proposed," observed Guy; "people always do get a little flurried, you know."

"Do they? Well, I suppose that was the case with me. But I don't remember——"

"Oh, don't be such a ninny," said Guy Barnes, impatiently.

"I wish I could remember just what I said, though," observed Martin.

And even after he was married he never could quite recall whether he proposed or not. But as long as dear Fanny was all his own what did it signify?

Things in General.

Board in Boston only costs a working woman $3.50 a week. She spends twice as much as this for gumdrops and works of philosophy, so that she is never able to support a husband in the luxury that the average New England bachelor demands as the condition of relinquishing his liberty.

The curse of Ireland has been centralization. What I hope and desire, what I labor for and have above all things at heart, is to decentralize administrative authority there. We have disestablished the church, relieved the tenant class of many grievances; we are now trying to produce a state of things which will make the humblest Irishman realize that he is a governing agency, and that the government is to be carried off for him and by him.—Gladstone.

Recent investigation into the density of the population in Paris, as published in the Globe of that city, develops the fact that there are 68,129 houses, with a population of 2,269,000 inhabitants, giving an average of 33 persons to each house. In New York the average number to each dwelling house is 16; in Boston, 8; in Philadelphia, nearly 6. There are more individual owners of houses who reside in them, in Philadelphia, than in any other city in the United States.

A writer on social topics in New York, who has seen the world and knows what he is talking about, says the rich men of Europe do not spend anywhere near the amount of money that is considered necessary for "keeping up appearances" among the capitalists of New York, and declares that within the past two or three years the extravagance in the latter city is simply appaling. There are a thousand men who annually spend an income of $100,000, most of which is wasted, and as many more who manage to get away with from $25,000 to $75,000 annually, when they could get just as much comfort and enjoyment out of one-quarter of that amount.

The avoirdupois pound is in the ratio of 175 to the Troy pound of 144. The lowest weight of avoirdupois is a dram, and this pound is equivalent to the weight of 27.7015 cubic inches of distilled water. The lowest Troy weight is a grain, of which 480 make an ounce and 12 ounces make a pound. This weight was brought originally from Arabia by the Crusaders, and it was used for weighing gold and silver and chemicals by the old alchemists. It is now used by druggists as apothecaries' weight and for weighing gold, silver and jewels. Avoirdupois is a French term, and the weight was brought into England from France.

In three of the principal hospitals of Paris the Sisters of Charity, numbering about 100, are at once to be replaced by ordinary male and female attendants. This step has been forced upon the Administration of Public Assistance by the Paris Municipal Council, who have made the continuation of their annual endowment of 17,000,000 francs conditional upon its execution.

Some years ago a man died at Neufchatel whom everybody supposed to be perfectly sane, but among whose papers was found a document of a somewhat crazy description—nothing less than a regularly drawn up partnership contract between himself and God. Isaac Vuagneaux imagined that God was his partner in the liquor business. The Almighty was to give His blessing in lieu of capital, and his share of the profits was to be given to the poor. Isaac prospered at all events; and every year regularly distributed 7,333 francs, 35 centimes to the poor of the city. The whole business contract has been published as a curiosity in the Revue Scientifique.

All's Well That Ends Well.

From the Jacksonville Union.

A wealthy young Englishman, named Henry Clifford, met at Niagara Falls a young English lady, who had been brought from England to America by her mother and brother to escape the importunities of Mr. Clifford. The mother and father preferred a very wealthy and very aged person for a husband for their daughter. The brother sided with his sister, and when the lover arrived at Niagara he was taken in hand by the brother. The result was an elopement and marriage. The young pair went on to New York and thence took the steamer to Florida. Mr. Clifford bought an orange farm on the Indian river. Mrs. Bell, with her son, arrived here recently and found her daughter and son-in-law at the hotel. For a time there was a prospect of a lively scene. But the young man's "What's the use mother?" made it all right. Daughter and husband was forgiven. All four are going to the orange farm on Indian river next week.

A HALE OLD MAN.

The Historian Bancroft the Life of Washington Society.

Geo. Bancroft is 82, writes a Washington correspondent. He has been writing history for years. It has lengthened his days. Perhaps this is the reason why Blaine contemplates a history of political events in the United States between the Lincoln and Garfield administrations. I wonder whether the other shelved statesmen who propose to settle down in their Washington palaces purpose writing history. Ferry might tell us all about silver mines; Windom could enlighten the world on stock operations; Saunders of Nebraska could give us points on agriculture as a species of political capital. What a history of the navy of the world Robeson could write! and how entertaining Voluntary Contribution Hubbel's essay on political assessments, past and present, would be! At any rate, Mr. Bancroft lives a life that any of them envy. He has everything that heart could desire—fame in his lifetime, houses and friends, horses and roses, books and bouquets. He lives well at Newport in summer, and he lives better in Washington in Winter. He said the other day that that was his idea of a sensible life—six months of the country in summer and six months of the city in winter, with plenty of flowers and friends and books and horses in both. He is fond of roses—he has some of the finest roses in the world, both here and at Newport—and of books and of paintings and of sculptures and of fine horses. So are a great many other people; but unlike a majority of them, he is able to have what he likes. One thing that he enjoys very much is horseback riding on a smooth road north of Washington. When he can get a companion or two he is almost happy. When several pedestrian or equestrians have bowed to him he is quite happy. He is, like most successful men, profoundly self-respectful. He likes to have people bow to him whether he knows them or not. Another thing that he is fond of is dining out. He is a welcome guest at any dinner table in Washington, from the president's down. He has great conversational power and an abundant fund of anecdotes and recollections. He is entirely adequate to the entertainment of one end of any dinner table. He tells a story about a man who has been dead these fifty years as though he had been with us but yesterday. In the course of his long life he has held such positions at home or abroad as brought him into contact with the best as well as the worst prominent men in the world. His memory is simply marvelous. It is full of well arranged facts, faces and fancies, the accumulation of a busy brilliant lifetime. He told at a dinner not long ago, with great neatness and grace, the story of near sighted old Gov. Lincoln of Massachusetts, who crossing Boston common sixty or seventy or eighty years ago, bowed gravely and courteously to a flock of geese then advancing toward him, with a "Thank you, my children, very polite of you to bow, I'm sure." No one could have imitated the ancient Governor's manner and voice more perfectly than did the bright-eyed, white-haired octogenarian across the table, and the laughter that followed was as deserved as it was hearty. Mr. Bancroft has a warm side for all Massachusetts people. He takes enough time every day out of his busy life to stop at the hotels, where the Boston people usually stop. "Any Boston people here?" he asks, and, if the clerk says: "Here are some cards; put them in their boxes. Good day." And then he is off again to his drive or his book.

The Wooing o' It.

Chapter First.—She lived in the sweet consciousness of his love. Also in a flat. Her father looked higher for her, and spurned the addresses of the humble Jeremiah Prout. Prout was proud. Still he loved ardently, devotedly; with a whole heart ecstasy that led him to dare everything for her he loved. That is the way Prout put it in his letters. At the same time he always met her he loved outside of her father's house, or rather flat. Thus did the faithful pair avoid the wrath of the old man.

Chapter Second.—But love grew apace. She told Prout that the coast would be clear. "Ring the fifth bell and the door will open unto you," she said. "The old woman and the gov' go out for the evening. I shall be alone. Come early"

Chapter third.—The moonlight flooded the best room of Prout's girl's flat. He was sitting in its silver light. She was sitting on his lap. One lily arm was about his neck. They were happy. On a neighboring roof a feline lover was singing a roudel to his mate, and all nature breathed of love. Suddenly Prout's girl jumped to her feet and stood gazing with agonized features toward the door. A heavy step was heard upon the stair. "It's the old duffer," she gasped, and fell fainting across the piano. Prout looked at the window. Alas! Prout's girl occupied the fifth floor.

Chapter fourth.—Landed, but oh so broken up! The old man had lent Prout his persuasive assistance down the entire five flights of stairs. Prout remained a bachelor.

SCHLIEMANN'S DISCOVERIES

His Excavations on the Spot Where Ilium Stood For a Thousand Years.

Athens Correspondent London Times.

In a letter headed "The Archæological Discoveries in the Levant," dated Athens, 18th ult., and published in the Times of the 19th inst., it is stated that "the resumption of my excavations at Hissarlik, has failed to develop anything confirmatory of my Ilian hypothesis, and that the famous stratification of civilization which was supposed to testify to the extreme antiquity of the city is shown to be untenable." The anonymous writer is evidently no archæologist; moreover he does not speak of my excavations from personal inspection, nor does he seem to have the slightest knowledge of what has been written on the subject since August last.

I excavated in 1882 for five months—namely, from March 1st till August 1st, employing all the time 150 laborers, and aided by two of the most eminent architects of Europe, Mr. J. Hofler, of Vienna, and Dr. William Dorpfeld, of Berlin, the latter of whom superintended for four years the technical part of the excavations of the German Empire at Olympia. Not only have these excavations been no failure, but, on the contrary, they have yielded far more important results than all my previous excavations at Hissarlik since 1870. The success of five prehistoric and two later settlements, as given by me in "Ilios," is confirmed by my architects (see Dr. Dorpfeld's letter in the Augsburger Allgemaine Zeitung, of September 25, 1882, and an extract of it in the Academy of October 14th) who have, however, proved to me that the enormous masses of calcined debris, which I had attributed to the third city, really belong to the second city, which perished in some fearful catastrophe, and which had on the hill of Hissarlik only its Pergamus, with five or six edifices of very large dimensions, while its lower city extended east, south and west on the plateau.

We have excavated most carefully all the buildings of the Acropolis among which, two, of very large proportions, and with walls respective 1 meter 45 and 1 meter 25 thick, seem to us, and for many reasons, to be temples. Nothing could better prove the great antiquity of these buildings than the fact that they were built of unbaked bricks, and that the walls had been baked in situ by huge masses of wood piled upon both sides of each wall and kindled simultaneously. Each of these buildings has a vast vestibulum, and each of the front face of the lateral walls is provided with six vertical quadrangular beams, which stood on well polished bases, the lower which was preserved, though of course, in a calcined state. We, therefore, see that in these ancient Trojan temples, the antoe or parastades, which in later Helenic temples fulfilled only a technical purpose, served here as an important element of construction, for they were intended to protect the wall ends and to render them capable of supporting the ponderous weight of the superincumbent cross-beams and the terrace. We found similar primitive antoe in two other edifices and at the lateral walls of the north-western gate.

We also found that the great wall of the ancient Acropolis has been built of unbaked bricks, and had been baked like the temple walls in situ. I lay stress on the fact that a similar process of baking entire walls has never yet been discovered, and that the antæ in the Helenic temples are nothing else than reminiscences of the wooden antæ of old, which were of important constructive use. We discovered in the Acropolis of the second city three large gates all of which led down to the lower city. Homer knew of only one gate at Troy (the Scæan, sometimes also called the Dardanian Gate), but this gate was on the west side of the lower city; the gates of the Pergamus are never mentioned in the poems. The three prehistoric settlements which succeeded each other in the calcined ruins of the Acropolis were poor and insignificant, and none of them extended beyond the hill of Hissarlik. The ruins of the lower city, therefore, remained deserted for ages, the bricks crumbled away, and the stone of the walls served the new settlers of Hissarlik for building their houses, or, as the legend ran (see Strabo, xiii.599), they were used for building the walls of Sigeum.

The site was in later times occupied by the Æolic Ilium, which stood for more than 1,000 years, but nevertheless the traces of the ancient burnt city have not been obliterated; the huge masses of prehistoric pottery, perfectly identical with that of the second city on the Pergamus, which were found in the extensive excavations made by me on the lower plateau, testify to its existence on the spot. Its existence seems further to be proved by the vertical wall represented in "Ilios," p. 24, N, 2 B., as well as by the three gates, and above all the ground plan, and the number of loose edifices in the Pergamus. I have now excavated the latter entirely, and for this reason alone the excavations at Troy must be considered as terminated forever. I have also excavated seven more of the conical tumuli, called heroic tombs, and have thoroughly explored the ancient city on the heights of Burnabashi, as well as the sites of four other ancient towns.

A full account of this, my last Trojan campaign, with excellent plans, and about 200 engravings of the most curious kinds, will be published by Mr. John Murray. HENRY SCHLIEMANN.

Leprosy in the United States.

When we remember that leprosy prevailed in Great Britian and other countries, now nearly or quite free from it, in comparatively recent times; when we take into account the considerable Scandinavian immigration to our shores now going on; and, above all, when we reflect that the policy of isolation pursued by communities in which the disease is rife is not an ostracism of the leper on account merely of his loathsomeness, but a wholesome precaution for the general safety, founded on the conviction that leprosy is contagious, which conviction is forcing itself more on those who have made the matter a subject of scientific study—when we take all these things into consideration, and couple them with the grim fact that leprosy leads infallibly to death within a few years, we may well ask if it is not desirable for us as a people, and if it is not incumbent on the government, to take steps to prevent the spread of the disease in this country. To be sure, the contagiousness of leprosy is not the rank communicability of the acute infectious disease, but that it is contagious to such a degree as to make it unsafe to allow its victims to go in and out among their fellow men year after year, seems to admit of little if any question. Certainly, the community should give itself the benefit of whatever doubt there may be in the case, and isolate the leper ruthlessly, and, as regards leprous immigrants, forbid their landing on our shores.—[N. Y. Medical Journal.

Gov. Bate, of Tennessee, has divided up the reward of $10,000 for Polk's arrest, Sneely, Morrill and Gosling get $9,370, and detectives Pryde, of Memphis, and Fields and Porter, of Nashville, $100 each in addition to expenses.

STRESS OF WEATHER.

By the author of "Countess Violet."

Of course it was very cold, but fine seasonable weather. So said each of the three middle-aged gentlemen as they drew themselves up for a final warm at their dining-room fires, waited on by such feminine slaves as happened to exist for them in the shape of wives, daughters or housekeepers. What a hero a man must feel who sees his mittens laid in the fender, his great coat heated, and regretful admiration in the surrounding countenances!

Arrived at the railway station, and deprived of their natural worship, these three men were just as ordinary, comfortable-looking citizens as you could well meet with. They were all strangers to each other, and chanced at the same hour to book themselves for Paddington and doing it cheerfully, for how could, they tell what was going to happen! There was a look of having outwitted somebody—a complacent look—on Mr. Dolman's countenance as he pocketed his ticket and purchased his newspaper. "I'll drop in upon them before breakfast," he muttered to himself, with a self-satisfied nod. Mr. Weaver secured neither a Times nor a Telegraph, but the latest edition of a scientific journal. Mr. Podbury supplied himself with punch fun and truth; laughter and polite lies, being his usual requirements for a happy journey.

Then these three middle aged gentlemen got into the first-class compartment, obtained steaming hot tins for their feet, and occupied the minutes before starting on their sixty-mile journey in rolling themselves in stout railway rugs. The whistle sounded, the train moved with a prophetic groan, and each man, like a true Briton, opened wide his newspaper and shut out any possible sight of his fellow-travelers.

An hour later the newspapers are dropped, and the gentlemen are all engaged in forming their own private opinions as to the meaning of a very fierce wind that has risen, and is now engaged in blowing snow as fine as sifted sugar through the cracks in the carriage windows. Mr. Podbury, indeed, changed his seat, having a clear objection to being ornamented like a Christmas cake. At last the most genial of the three men—spoke.

"Never saw such a sky!. Full of snow!"

"Humph! think its getting thicker?" inquired Mr. Dolman.

"Thicker, sir?" spoke in Mr. Weaver, solemnly. "There are evidences about us that the elements are preparing for a struggle—a great struggle, sir."

At this pronounced opinion from so evidently scientific a man, Mr. Dolman looked in amazement at his opposite neighbor. Mr. Podbury laughed cheerily.

"Good gracious! Cats and dogs, I dare say, in snow form!" A great swirl of wind drove the snow hard against the glass as he spoke, and, for a minute or so, the windows were blinded. Slower and slower moved the train, and finally stopped.

"What now?" cried Mr. Dolman, as he and Mr. Podbury thrust their heads out of opposite windows and as suddenly drew them in again. A guard plodding his way along and bending to the tempest, showed the most remarkable instance of railway-official-forbearence on record, for he waited to hear and answer the two gentlemen, who now tried to thrust their two heads out of one and the same window.

"Why have you stopped, guard?" asked the one.

"Why don't you go on, guard?" asked the other.

"We're fast in a drift, sirs, and can't get no farther."

At this astounding news the questioners became momentarily dumb; even from Mr. Podbury's cheerful face the light died out.

"It's disgraceful!—to-day of all days, guard—I shall be too late, after all!" burst forth Mr. Dolman in angry reproach. But the guard passed quietly onward, and the gentlemen shut up the window.

The only one of the three who wore an air of comfort and composure was Mr. Weaver. He read a short paragraph in his scientific journal, and murmured to himself:

"Most interesting! Wonderful!"

"What is, sir?" testily inquired Mr. Dolman. "Our being stuck in the snow?"

Mr. Weaver glanced up from his reverie with a mild remark: "I have been engaged for some years in the study of the Glacial Period, sir. As it was in the past it will undoubtedly be again. I see a beautiful corroboration in the scene around me of the evident near approach of the extraordinary cold phenomena we are led by the most learned of our men to expect."

"Every one to his taste," cried Mr. Podbury, shivering. "I hate ice myself," and he drew out a well-filled pocket-flask. Mr. Dolman, evidently put out by some private, serious complication, frowned and glowered silently. The snow was getting uncommonly deep, and presently the guard appeared again.

"No chance of moving, gentlemen, till we can get some men to dig us out. Nearest station just one mile off." And away he went.

"Does the fellow think we can walk?" demanded Mr. Dolman of Mr. Podbury.

"No, no. We must grin and bear it."

"I can't bear it, sir!" said Mr. Dolman, unreasonably. "If I don't get to Paddington in an hour, my niece and my niece's fortune will be lost to me forever."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Mr. Podbury, with keen pleasure at this chance of a little amusing scandal, "how's that, sir?" Even the Glacial Period man looked across with mild interest.

"My niece, a charming young lady, is is also my ward," said Mr. Dolman. "I have always intended that she should marry my son. Unfortunately I was persuaded to allow the girl to visit her aunt—one of those dreadful women who act for themselves and think they are cleverer than men; and under this misguided person's roof she has been permitted to renew a girlish love affair of which I had entirely disapproved and put a stop to. The result is that they are to be married this morning at Paddington Church at half-past 11. A clerk of mine found that out and telegraphed for me so that I might be in time to stop the mischief. And I should have been in time but for this—this—" and finding no adequate word ready to express his wrath, Mr. Dolman glared fiercely out at the fair but impeding snow wreaths.

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good," smiled Mr. Podbury, with an attempt at pleasantry, which the aggrieved uncle bitterly resented. "How jolly glad the young couple will be, sir, when they hear that you stuck fast on the right side of Reading!"

"Ugh!" growled the miserable Mr. Dolman. "Her money's all tied up! that's one comfort. Young Weaver can't make ducks and drakes of it."

"Weaver, sir!" said the scientific gentleman, with difficulty recalling himself from antediluvian dreams; "that's my name—and my son, Tom Weaver, of the Engineers, is to going to be married to-day. I was on my way to be present at the wedding. He is a downright good fellow, sir, and the pretty young girl is Mary Dolman."

"Good gracious!" cried Mr. Podbury, [illegible]

laughing heartily, "one on his way to assist, the other to prevent, and both stopped by the snow! Ha! ha! ha! I must say it's good!"

If Mr. Dolman could have roasted Mr. Podbury and converted Mr. Weaver into a permanent glacial monument he would have done it. That he should in his storm-bound desperation have confided his hopes and their disappointment to the father of that young rascal, Weaver!

But the snow got worse and worse. They reached Reading toward nightfall, and there Mr. Dolman stopped, wildly desirous to send off telegrams; one of reproach to his wicked niece, one to his home to say he was not lost. As the wires were damaged by the storm he could not send either. He made his way to a hotel in the town, and went to bed, roughly desiring the chambermaid not to call him until the line was clear for him to get home. As the young woman did not know where he lived she wisely remarked that it might be a week or more; to which he sulkily replied he didn't care if it were ten. The girl looked a moment at the door as it closed, and then nodded her head knowingly.

"'E looks old, but there's no mistake in the symptoms. 'E's bin and proposed to some one, and she won't have him?"—Tinsley's Magazine.

Truthfulness and Thoroughness.

William Cullen Bryant was a plain man and disliked pretentious people. "How is it that you can make Mr. Bryant talk?" asked a lady of another, with whom she had seen the poet conversing.

"Simply by not trying to be smart and and making no effort to talk well," was the reply.

Many sought the poet whose works they admired. Some used to call him cold and unsympathetic. They were mistaken. The man they sought was modest in his estimation of himself, and therefore shy. He disliked to be lionized and would not be patronized. But his apparent coldness of manner arose from his truthfullness—he was unwilling to express a greater degree of interest than he felt.

No man was more cordial to those he knew and esteemed. As the editor of the Evening Post, he was distinguished for his frank and easy manners with his subordinates. His commands were put in the form of requests. If he wished to see one of the staff, he never sent for, but went to, him. He never was ostentations of himself, or of his position.

Consideration for others and a desire to avoid the infliction of pain were prominent traits of Mr. Bryant's character. A literary editor of the Evening Post once had a bad case of poetic idiocy to deal with.

Mr. Bryant had said to him, "I wish you to deal very gently with poets, especially with the weaker ones." The editor was embarrassed—on one side was the injunction, on the other was the book of poems, without a line to praise. Just then Mr. Bryant came in, and the editor, stating his embarrassment, read some of the stanzas to him. "No, you can't praise it, of course," answered Mr. Bryant; "it won't do to lie about it. but"—turning the volume in his hand and inspecting it,—"you might say the binding is securely put on and that—well, the binder has planed the edges pretty smooth."

Journalism demands rapid work. Topics must be shot on the wing. The haste is fatal to the style of journalists. But Bryant's style was marked through his half-century of editorial work by purity and elegance. It never degenerated.

"How do you manage to retain the purity of your style?" asked a friend.

"If my style has fewer defects than you expect," answered the poet, "it is for the reason, I suppose, which Dr. Johnson gave Boswell for conversing so well: I always write my best."

"But," rejoined the friend, "there are daily emergencies when there is no time to choose words and be dainty, when the alternative is a hasty article or none at all."

"I would sooner," replied the painstaking editor, "the paper should go to press without an editorial article than to send to the printer one I was not satisfied with."

Perhaps another cause for the purity of Mr. Bryant's prose may be found in his habits of reading. He was fond of the old English classics, and often deplored their neglect by the present generation. He belived there was no worse theft than a bad book, and thought a man degraded his memory and reason who used them to read any book which which did not make him better, intellectually or morally.—Youth's Companion.

MONEY AND FAME.

A Statesman who Has Had Enough of the Thank Business in Politics.

"No, I don't want the governorship," said a leading Ohio Congressman this week. "There is not enough money in it. Thirty-five hundred a year and board yourself! Great God!. It don't pay. I have had enough of the thank-you business in politics, and I am now inclined to take Iago's advice and put money in my purse. The glory of fame is an empty thing, and I would rather leave my children the legacy of a good education and a comfortable competence than that they should sleep under the shadow of the finest monument ever erected by the adulation of mankind. What has the wife and family of a great statesman after he has died a pauper? What would Mrs. Garfield have to-day had she not been favored by peculiar circumstances? What is Garfield's glory to-day? I tell you the world is forgetting him already, and the funds for his monuments are growing very slowly. The day after he was dead I could have raised a fund of $50,000 to make a statue in his honor in my native city; to-day I could not raise $1,000. It is so with the glory of fame. The great man dies; the world stops a second, and then rushes madly on. In a short time he is forgotten, and often, if he died poor, the people say, "Yes, he was a great man, but he never laid up anything. He worked all his life and left his family poor." And soon the praise at the time of his death is turned into blame and sometimes into calumny.

"Name and fame! Bah! They are empty words, and he who seeks them, poor, wrongs his family and himself. In these pursey times money is everything and it contaminates the halls of the capital itself. I hope to see the day when sparkling eyes and beaded wine will not have more force than the tears and prayers of thousands. I hope to see the time when money shall not influence legislation and buy the way into the very holy of holies of the people's trust."

BATTLE WITH A LIONESS.

Keeper Marvin's Struggle for Life—Jealous of the Attention Shown Three Cubs—Juno, of Doris Menagerie, Attacks an Attendent and Breaks Out of her Cage.

Philadelphia Times.

A monster lioness belonging to J. B. Doris' Inter-Ocean Circus created the sensation of the year in the winter quarters of the show in Frankfort on Monday evening. Peter Marvin, an animal trainer, was frightfully injured by the enraged beast, and an African blauw bok, one of a pair Mr. Doris paid $1,000, died of fright during the pandemonium. Numerous additions have been lately made to the managerie of the Inter-Ocean show and the animals occupy several buildings on Harrison street. The tropical animals are kept in a room by themselves. This apartment is fifty feet square, and three of the walls are masked in by heavy oak and iron cages. There are three tiers of these massive dens, and behind the bars of each are from one to three specimens of rare wild animals. The lions, tigers, leopaads, panthers and hyenas are imprisoned in the lower dens while the smaller animals and tropical birds occupy the upper tiers. In the center of the room is an immense stove, which is kept red hot night and day.

A tame pelican, a flamingo, three crested cockatoos, half a dozen monkeys and a family of performing dogs formed a drowsy circle around the glowing stove yesterday afternoon. A row of elephants along the east wall stood up to their knees in fragrant hay, and in stalls near by were a score of other herbivorous animals from South Africa. High above the tiers of cages are the sleeping bunks of the attendants of the animals. The dozen lions in the collection are as fine specimens as have ever been seen in captivity, and they form one of the most notable features of the Inter-Ocean menagerie. Juno, the largest lioness of the lot, is five years old. Until last summer she was regarded as one of the best-dispositioned beasts of her species. In June 1882, another lioness in the menagerie became the mother of three cubs. Juno, who occupied an adjoining cage during the travels of the Inter-Ocean show, became greatly interested in the cubs, and was in the habit of watching them for hours at a time. Last fall the mother of the cubs died, and they were raised by hand. Juno's interest in the leonine babies increased after the death of their mother, and finally she became so jealous that when anyone approached the cubs she would become furious with rage.

In the animal house Juno occupies a cage in the lower tier, against the north wall. The cubs, which now weigh about fifteen pounds each, are lodged in the lower tier, at the east wall. This enables Juno to have an unobstructed view of their cage. Just before dark on Monday evening Mr. Marvin was feeding the animals. He gave the cubs their share of liver, and paused a moment to fondle them. This put Juno in a frightful rage. Marvin turned to quiet her, and as he advanced toward the cage he stumbled and fell against the bars. In an instant she seized his right arm above the elbow. In order to protect his head and body the man fell, and with his left hand grasped the bottom of the cage. Juno held his right arm with one paw and struck through the bars at his head with the other. A lad named Donahue grabbed an iron bar and tried to make Juno drop Marvin. The boy's efforts only increased the rage of the beast. By this time every animal in the place was wildly excited and their roars and cries were heard squares away. To increase the din the animals of the O'Brien's circus in the adjoining building added their voices to the chorus. Donahue ran out of the building shouting for help.

As there is a small army of workmen about the place the lion house was soon surrounded with men. In the meantime Juno had torn the flesh from Marvin's arm, struck him several wicked blows on the shoulder and then allowed him to drop to the ground and crawl away. Just as the rescuers reached the doors they heard a sound of crashing timbers, accompanied by a series of blood-freezing roars. Juno had thrown her body against the bars and broken through. The approach of night made the interior of the building dark, and no one cared to venture in. They heard Juno charging around the place and they hesitated. They supposed that Marvin was dead. He, however, managed to reach the rack in which the heavy iron bars used to clean the cages are kept, and snatching one boldly advanced on Juno, who crouched in a corner. All this time the other animals were making the most frightful noise. Above the din the men at the doors to their astonishment heard Marvin ordering the lioness back to her cage. This reassured them and they started to enter. As the doors opened Juno sprang over Marvin's head and took refuge in a stall near the blauw boks. Marvin shouted to close the doors and, following the now partially cowed lioness, struck her twice with the iron bar. Then he poked her out, and with an angry roar she vaulted back into her cage and the danger was over. New bars were quickly fitted in and the case was made doubly secure by the addition of new iron braces. Marvin's injuries were attended to by the physician, who says he will not lose the use of his arm. After Juno was caged it was noticed that one of the blauw boks was trembling like a leaf and tears trickled down the frightened beasts face. Ten minutes later it was dead.

A Story of Gambetta.

The Paris Charivari has a story of Gambetta. Four years ago when he was elected president of the chamber of deputies he ordered preparations to be made for a fete at the Palais d'Orsay. The morning of the great day the grand salon was filled with workmen. The master workman, who had gone out for a moment, cried out in horror when he returned: "Somebody has been smoking. If I could only catch the rascal I—". "It is I," said a gentleman, approaching from the window which had hidden him. "You, Mr. President?" cried the master mason, in confusion. "I assure you I did not know; I beg a thousand pardons for my language." "All right," answered Gambetta; "but suppose it had been one of the workmen, what then?" "He would have been fined half a day's pay." "If that is the tariff, and since my day's pay is two hundred francs, here are five louis; take them all out and let them drink to my health."

A Joke of Associate Justice Story's.

From Josiah Quincy's Dairy, 1820.

The invitation to go to Washington with Judge Story did not imply any promise of attention after we arrived in that city, as he was careful to point out when I received it. "The fact is," said he, "I can do very little for you there, as we judges take no part in the society of the place. We dine once a year with the president, and that is all. On other days we take our dinners together, and discuss at table the questions which are argued before us. We are great ascetics, and even deny ourselves wine, except in wet weather." Here the judge paused, as if thinking that the act of mortifica- [illegible] severe a tax upon human credulity, and presently added: "What I say about the wine, sir, gives you our rule; but it does sometimes happen that the chief justice will say to me, when the cloth is removed, "Brother Story, step to the window and see if it does not look like rain." And if I tell him that the sun is shining brightly, Judge Marshall will sometimes reply: "All the better, for our jurisdiction extends over so large a territory that the doctrine of chances makes it certain that it must be raining somewhere, and it will be safe to take something."

Little Sut.

Up in Tompkins county, N. Y., lives a well-to-do farmer named Pitkins, with his wife and two daughters. Having no sons he is dependent on hired help, the supply of which is regulated according to the season, a number of farm hands being necessary during planting and harvesting of crops, while one being usually the only assistant needed in the winter. Realizing the need of a boy on the place to do the chores for which it did not justify to hire a man, Pitkins talked the matter over with his wife, and they decided to seclect a waif from the poor house and raise him up as one of the family, which of course meant food and clothing until he was of age, and three months schooling in the winter.

With Farmer Pitkins to decide was to act; so the next day he and Mrs. Pitkins drove over in the buggy to the county poor-house and made application for an orphan. The superintendent, always willing to dispose of his charges to farmers, ordered out the boys in a line for a review, and Pitkins and his wife eyed the boys closely, and talked with them. He, with an eye to service, selected a large, strong boy, but she, with a motherly instinct, akin to sympathy, picked out little Sut, the subject of the sketch.

"Why, Mary," exclaimed Mr. Pitkins, "he's too small."

"But he'll grow, John, and then I like his looks better."

"Looks! Tut, tut! What have looks got to do with it?"

"A great deal. If we are to adopt him and raise him up as a son, and even if he is only to be a farm hand, we do not want a boy to grow up dishonest and vicious. I don't like the big boy's face."

So farmer Pitkins grumbled a little over her choice, as he lifted Sut into the buggy between them and drove home, the boy was indeed small for service on a farm but he seemed grateful for the home, and was willing to do all the busy tasks his hands were put to do and, would put his little hand on his tired back without a murmur, after a long time sawing wood. Mrs. Pitkins seemed drawn toward him by his very diminutive size and strength, while Pitkins seemed almost to dislike him, and was always grumbling about the boy being too small, although the farmer's wife would very sensibly remark that she believed the willingness of a small boy would accomplish more then the unwillingness of one twice his size. As little Sut wasn't large enough to wait on the girls, they rather sided with their father, and made, the poor boy's life rather unpleasant by teasing him.

Thus matters went on for a season or so, while one farm hand after another came and went; and, although colts and calves and pigs and chickens all grew and fattened on the place, little Sut seemed at a standstill and failed to come up to Mrs. Pitkin's assertion that he would grow.

"It's no use, Mary, waiting for this boy to grow. I must take him back to the Poor House and get a larger boy. You can go with me and select the boy, but he must be larger."

Mrs. Pitkins, with a feeling of tenderness toward the little homeless waif she had selected, hadn't the heart to go and pick out a boy to supplant him in the home that now seemed as dear to him as if he had been born in it, so Mr. Pitkins drove over alone, while the farm hand took the wagon and drove to the mill for lumber, leaving Mrs. Pitkins, the two girls and little Sut on the farm alone except a little dog which Sut had been allowed to adopt from the roadside, the cattle on a farm scarcely being counted as company by lone women who cannot look to them for the protection which even a boy or small dog can attempt.

Tramps, miserable, dangerous outcasts seem to be the constant menace of unprotected farmers, especially the women who are so often left alone. Little Sut was in the barn, with his dog, sorting potatoes, when his attention was called by hearing one of the girls scream, and looking out, to his surprise and horror, he saw a man rush out at the kitchen door in pursuit of one of the girls. With a boyish impulse Sut ran out with a small basket of potatoes in his hand, followed by the dog, which he urged to a fierce attack on the man. The little dog went gallantly into the fight and set his teeth so vigorously into the legs of the tramp that the girl was enabled to escape from him and run to a neighbour's for assistance. Little Sut realized that there was work for him to do. The screams which came from the house plainly indicated that the one man was not the only enemy on the place, and with a shout little Sut rushed in to find another tramp on the point of overcoming Mrs. Pitkins and the other daughter in a fierce struggle, in which he had almost torn their clothing off.

The noise that little Sut made and the vigorous fusilade of potatoes that he hurled at the tramp so disconcerted him that it allowed the two women a chance to escape and lock themselves in a room up stairs.

Poor little Sut and his dog were left alone to contend with the two enraged tramps. The fight was uneven and short the dog was driven from the field, and little Sut alone stood at bay. Suddenly one of the tramps, who had been been keeping an eye open for danger, saw approaching the farmer to whose house the other daughter had fled, and giving the alarm, the two desperadoes rapidly made their escape to the thick woods near by.

They had done their work cruelly and well. Little Sut lay in one corner motionless, where he fell, and the neighbors laid him on the bed, while Mrs. Pitkins and her daugters bent over him and frantically called his name. There was a gurgling sound in his throat, and a little stream of blood trickled down the side of his mouth and stained the white, ruffled slip of the pillow. Just then Sut opened his eyes as Mrs. Pitkins returned from selecting another boy to fill his place. A little cut on Sut's breast showed where the knife penetrated his lungs, and the gurgling sound was the blood that was forcing its life tide inside.

"Did I drive 'em off?"

That was all Sut ever said, but, with a smile on his face and the blood streaming from his mouth, he died in the arms of Farmer Pitkins, who had gone to swap him off because he was too small to do anything.

A little grave down at the village churchyard, kept green by three grateful women and fragrant with perfumes of flowers, is all now left on earth of little Sut, but somewhere we know he has gone where they do not think him too small.—M. Quad.

A Dakota Man Spreads Himself.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"But," remonstrated the New Utrecht farmer, when the Dakota agriculturalist had finished his discription of enormous farms, big crops, and corresponding profits; "but you only have a few weeks of farming weather; what do you do through the fall, winter, and spring? During all that time your investment is lying idle."

"Stranger," retorted the Dakota man with a look of commiseration; "stranger, was you ever located in that neck o' the woods?"

The New Utrecht man admitted for the sake of the argument that he had never been in "them parts to speak of."

"Have you ever been anywhere to see farmin' except down on your own bean patch?" demanded the Dakota man, following up his advantage.

The New Utrecht man conceded that he hadn't been about "as much as some."

"Well, I'll put you on to the way in which we make money all the year round. Why, sir, last winter I sold the snow on my farm for what it cost me to fodder my stock! It's true sir. And worse than that, it was a finer quality of snow than anybody ever raised in that section before."

"Didn't it all fall at the same time?" asked the New Utrecht man, incredulously.

"You bet it did," replied the Dakota man. "But the rest of 'em didn't see any money in snow and they just neglected the finest crop of snow that ever fell in that part of the country."

The New Utrecht man looked around in a mystified way.

"You don't mean to say that you have to cultivate snow up in that part of the country?" he exclaimed.

"You don't exactly cultivate it, but you've got to weed it and give it water, haven't you?" and he regarded the New Utrecht man with a glance of undisguised disgust. "You don't suppose you can get any better crop of anything, unless you pay some attention to it, do you?"

"What do you do in the spring?" inquired the New Utrecht man, ignoring the last question.

"We do business, sir." retorted the Dakota man, loftily. "You may think it strange that men should do business at any season of the year, but we do more business in the Spring than we do in a century. Last Spring, sir, I sold enough mud off my farm to pay for all my seed wheat and leave me a margin for six or seven hundred head of stock besides. I tell you, we farm out in our region," and the Dakota man stretched himself out and gazed benignly on the New Utrecht man.

"Must be a great country," murmured the latter. "Do you have just as good luck in the Fall as you appear to have the balance of the year?"

"Stranger," responded the Dakota man, rising deliberately and shaking himself from head to foot; "stranger, the Fall has always been my big harvest time. That is really when I make my money. I was in hopes you wouldn't allude to it, stranger, because I hate to give it away. But you have acted so like a perfect gentleman that I don't mind letting you in. Last Fall I stole over six hundred head of horses. Think of that for a one season job. Stole'em, stole'em and got the cash."

"I thought they hung men for stealing horses in that country?" said the New Utrecht man, backing away from his new acquaintance, with disfavor plainly planted in his face.

"They used to," replied the Dakota man; with a sigh for the good old times, "and when they did that you could get some kind of a price for horses. But now everything is down, and you have to take what you can get."

"Isn't there any punishment for stealing horses now?" persisted the New Utrecht man, who was trying to account to himself for the Dakota man being alive.

"Punishment! well, you bet!" snorted the man from Dakota. "Punishment, well, I should smile. Punishment! Why stranger, just on toward the latter end of last fall I sold enough tar and feathers that I had accumulated to build a white marble mansion, and take this little trip east. Punishment! Well, I should remark to utter. But, stranger, we make even the punishment pay up in our quarter section of God's territory. Let's liquor."

Richard Powell's Twenty Sons.

It was at Bakely's Run that old Richard Powell and his family, famous for its numbers, lived over a century ago. During his life Powell took great pleasure in boasting of his large family. It was his habit to remark: "I have twenty sons and each one has a sister." Those to whom he used to relate this naturally asked: "What! Forty children? Can it be possible?" Then the old man would laughingly explain that he had twenty sons and one daughter, so each boy therefore had a sister.

Eighteen of the sons were in the war of the revolution, and were noted for their bravery and good fighting qualities. Many were wounded at various times, and three of them, as far as now known by the descendants were killed. Previous to the war the sons resided with their parents on a large farm at Bakely's Run, and aided in working the farm under the direction of their father. They are described as having been large, well developed and strong men, and their appearance in the field was a sight well worth seeing. The daughter wandered off into the woods one day when only 8 years old. She lost her way, and for three days and nights nothing was seen of her. The brothers and their friends industriously searched for the child, and when she was discovered she had lost her reason. She remained an imbecile all her life. In time the sons married. Some remained at the old homestead, while others took up residences in other parts of the state. Their descendants are now scattered all over New Jersey in large numbers.—Philadelphia Record.

Meerchaum Statistics.

The place most productive of this mineral is known to be near the town of Eski-scheir, in Anatolia, Asia Minor. A recent account by Herr Adler states that the preparation of 100 boxes of meerchaum there takes twelve to fifteen persons two months, and costs about £120. In Eski-scheir the average price of the box of mercantile ware has varied since 1872 between about £6 to £10 (last year it was about the former). Refuse ware can be had at about an eighth of the price. There are ten qualities, and each is to be had in four sizes, there being 25 to 40 pieces of the first size per box, and 450 to 1,500 pieces of the fourth (the box is 28 inches long, 8 inches broad, and 15 1-2 inches deep.) In the last two decades the export of meerchaum has considerably increased; from 3,000 boxes in 1855 it has risen to 11,100 in 1881.

In Constantinople the trade is managed by about fifteen firms—Austrian, Bulgarian, Greek, Armenian and Turkish—who bring their wares into the Vienna market. The large importation into Vienna may be said to date from between 1850 and 1860, when the productions of pipebowls and cigar-tips was greatly increased for export to England. France and North America. In 1860 a considerable export of pipes to San Francisco was first developed, while large quantities of cigar-tips were sent to America and Australia via Hamburg. Since then the conditions of the trade have altered much, chiefly in consequence of the high duties imposed in America. In that country arose, with the aid of emigrant turners from Australia, a home industry, which has successfully completed with the Vienna pipe manufacturer for the product of which America was previously the best customer). With France and Germany, the United States obtain the raw product mainly from Austria.—London Times.

Cass and the Office-Seeker.

A story was told of Lewis Cass and an old friend of his earlier years by Gen. Wetmore of New York, than whom few then living in Washington enjoyed more keenly a good story.

Lewis Cass, on arriving at the department of state (he was secretary), found on his desk the card of a gentleman from his native state. The door-keeper was told to show him in, which he did. A blunt old farmer grasped the secretary's hand with a "Well, I'm mighty glad to see you, but mabbe you don't remember me." Of course the secretary received him cordially—he was a constituent—he looked him over carefully—couldn't recall him, and was compelled to say, "Well no sir; you have the advantage of me." Then the farmer gave his name and Cass remembered the comrade of his youth, though all the changes forty years had made. The secretary was profuse in expressions of pleasure at seeing his old friend again, and all that, and finally said:

"Well, now Joe, what brought you down here? I am curious to know. Is there anything I can do for you? You know I would do anything in the world for you, in my power."

"There, now, Lew! That's just what I told 'em. I said I knew Lew when he was a youngster, and I knew he wouldn't change like that."

Cass: Well, now Joe, what is it? How can I help you? Just say it; if it is in my powew, I will do it for you most willingly you know there's nothing in this world that I wouldn't do for you. Now what is it?

Farmer: Well, I don't know just what it is, but I thought you might get me a sinumcurem" I believe they call it, any way, it's where there's plenty pay and not much to do. You see, Lew, I ain't able to do much now, and I wouldn't a-come down any way, if things hadn't gone so powerful bad—but I won't bother you about that. I jest knew you'd put me thro', if you knew my fix. You see I ain't partiklar, only something.

Cass: "My dear old friend, you know I would do anything in the world for you I could, but, you see, I am afraid I could not explain it to you, you cannot understand how many persons there are wanting to get an office, and how few get any. You see you would not understand it. I do not see anything just now, but, Joe, I'll keep my eye on you. Just call in whenever you can; I shall be pretty busy now for awhile."

The farmer called the next morning. The secretary was "very much engaged," but in a hurried manner said:

"I'm on the lookout. I'll keep my eye on you."

It is unnecessary to lengthen the story. Day after day the answer was the same in effect—"Looking out for him;" "anything in the world he could do" and "keeping his eye" on him.

Ten days passed in this way; the old rustic had seen Washington. His patience was used up, and he had only money enough left to get home with; he would see Lew once more.

Joe called, he was shown in with the same promptness as ever. The secretary "was very busy," but the old farmer was not to be put off this time. "Now Lew, just listen a minit. You've told me again and again if there was anything you could do you'd do it. I have found something you can do for me. I know you can, and that's all I want now."

The secretary: My dear old friend. I am so glad. Just tell me. You know I would do anything in my power to help you. You cannot know how pleased I shall be to serve you in any way in my—Office-seeker: Yes, yes! I know I've money enough to get home, and all I ask is to keep your eyes off me.

The Rage For Old Furniture.

Says the London Queen—The best furniture is not by any means always the dearest at the outset, for purchasers must always pay an increased price for the latest fashion and for ornamentation, as well as (sometimes even more than) for real excellence of workmanship, which is the only expenditure that can be defended on economical grounds. There is a striking example of the cost of following the fashion in the present prices given for old furniture. A few years ago, within the memory of most of us, old oak chests and chairs could be picked up for the worth of the wood they were made of. At that time every one who had money to spend spent it on glit and ormolu and gaudy damask; and, since the old furniture is well made, it was very cheap. But now a rage has arisen for old oak. Fancy prices are asked and given for things that twenty years ago went for an old song, and only the wealthy can now afford to sit on the chairs that our grandmothers relegated to the back parlor.

Second-hand furniture is often preferable to new. The warps and started joints are plainly visible if bad wood has been for some time in use; no more warping will take place, and the price in comparison with that of new, is often much less than the amount of wear and tear would indicate.

There are circumstances that give to old furniture a distinct excellence, quite apart from the existence of a fashion for buying it. It was made by hand; generally the same man worked on each piece throughout, acquiring a special interest in every detail, and thinking no trouble to great to make it more perfect. It was sold oftenest in the immediate neighborhood, perhaps to a friend of the maker, and we may well believe that in this case special pains would be taken to produce the best possible value for the money. These old chests were bought as a marriage portion, filled with the clothes of the bride, and they were handed down from mother to daughter as good as when they were new. We have changed all that. Not only would daughters scout the idea of beginning house-keeping with their mothers' furniture, but they expect to purchase several new sets of furniture during their own lives. We do not even wish our furniture to last to long. It has almost as little individuality to the purchaser as the maker. Much if our modern furniture is cut by machinery. One makes legs and a second backs, while a third glues them together for a chair and passes it on to a fourth, who stuffs the seat. Often it passes through eight or ten pairs of hands before it is ready for sale. The result is a great many chairs, all about equally good, but none very good. It is scarcely possible to feel deep interest in the tenth part of a dozen of chairs, except so far as they are a means of subsistance, and yet this wholesale manufacture lowers prices so that manufacturers on a smaller scale are almost driven off the field.

The constitution of Indiana provides that all bills must be in the hands of the governor for his approval three days before final adjournment—which keeps the legislature together three days after the business of the session has been transacted. The object was to prevent a rush of business in the closing hours but it fails of that object because a vast amount of business is delayed, just as it is in nearly all legislative bodies to the last moment.

The contest between the telegraph company and the authorities of Chicago, will be watched with interest. The telegraph company were ordered two years ago to put their wires under ground, but made no honest effort to do so, and at the expiration of the time the poles and wires were cut by order of the mayor. The matter has gone to the courts and it remains to be seen whether the people, represented by the city authorities, have any rights in connection with the public streets which telegraph companies can be made to respect.

No other governer in the Union has such a concentration of political power in his hands as the Governor of Florida. That functionary appoints every state officer—judges, county commissioners, clerks of courts, state's attorneys, justice of the peace, etc.—with the exception of constables, who are elected by the voters of their respective precincts. This great power is used as a lever to lift the incumbent of the executive chair to what is deemed a higher position—the senate of the United States—but thus far none of the governors since the formation of the present constitution has reached that position.

The clause inserted by the house in the civil appropriation bill repealed the pre-emption laws and amended the homestead laws in such a way as to require the setler under them to reside on the land granted to him for two years and a half, instead of six months. This clause was antagonized in the senate and stricken out, because of objections to such a rider on an appropriation bill, and not to the proposition itself had it come in as a separate measure. There will probably be an effort at the next session of congress to pass it in some shape, as there seems to be a well-founded impression that there has been a vast amount of lying and fraud in the disposition of public lands.

When national bank notes are burned the gain is to the national government. The national bank notes are issued by the treasury department upon a deposit of United States bonds, the bank depositing the bonds getting back 90 per cent. of the par value of the bonds in national bank notes, and the bank can only regain its bonds by depositing with the treasury department legal tender notes to the full amount of its outstanding circulation. Hence, if the national bank notes are burned the banks must leave either bonds or legal tender notes in the treasury forever. So long as the banks maintain a circulation they will have bonds on deposit in the treasury, and when they withdraw their circulation the government will always hold a greenbank fund to the amount of the national bank notes destroyed, and it is the gainer by the destruction to just that extent.

Iowa has taken a step in advance of some of her sister states in the matters of country roads, which have been in bad conditions and in the spring often interrupting trains. A convention lately held at Iowa City composed of some 250 representative men, with a sprinkling of ex-governors and other notables resolved itself into the Iowa Road Improvement Association, with a full set of officers. The object of the association is declared to be the awakening of such an interest in the improvement of country roads as shall lead to more efficient legislative action. A long discussion took place as to the best method of improving roads, tiles and maccadam being generally recommended. The neglect of the last legislature to provide for some improvement in the present status was condemned. Resolutions were adopted looking to legislative action to authorize the raising of funds for the improvement of roads by taxation or otherwise, and for their expenditure in a more efficient manner than at present. The matter is attracting great attention and is heartily commended by the press of the state to the wisdom of the legislature. There is no other improvement so much needed in many portions of the west as good roads. They will double the utility of the railroads, and they will almost double the value of the lands in any county that will make them. Railroads lose half their usefulness in counties where they are only approachable by roads that are bad every time it rains and impassible during the spring. There are good-sized towns in every state, railroad towns at that, where wagons mire in the streets and which country freight cannot enter or leave for weeks at a time in bad weather. This is a tremendous burden to business, and a heavy tax on the farming interest.

A law passed at the last session of congress authorizes the postmasters of money-order offices, under authority of the postmaster general, to issue postal notes in denominations of $5 and under. This is an important bill, and will greatly facilitate the transmission of small sums through the mails. It authorizes the issue of money-orders of $5 or less, without corresponding advices, to be on engraved, paper and known as "postal notes," payable to bearer, such notes to be invalid after three months, but the holder can, after that time, get the par value of the note by applying at the post office department at Washington. For issuing a postal note of $5 or less a fee of 3 cents shall be charged. The bill also authorizes the issue of money-orders in denominations of $100 or less, but none for more than $100 can be issued. The following fees are fixed to be charged for money orders; for orders not exceeding $10, 8 cents; from $10, to $15, 10 cents; $15, to $30, 15 cents; $30, to $40, 20 cents; $40, to $50, 25 cents; $50, to 60, $30 cents; $60, to $70, 35 cents; $70, to $80, 40 cents; $80, to $100, 45 cents. The new law will go into effect July 1.

NEWS CONDENSED.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

Washington Special: The politicians are actively at work to see to it that the civil commission shall have very little to do. The law will not go into effect until July 15, and it will take a very industrious commission to discover any vacancies after that time in the offices to which the new law is to be applied. Ex-members of congress, members of the new congress and hack politicians of all sorts are hunting every possible corner in the department and in all the fifty clerk offices throughout the country to fill the vacancies which now exist, and to fill by anticipation any which may exist before July 15. The indications are that so far as the appointments of the commission will be almost functus offico before the time for its practical work shall begin. The board, of course, can, and undoubtedly will, proceed to make its examination of candidates and to prepare an "elegible list," but the applicants upon that list will probably be compelled to wait for dead men's shoes.

The first controller of the treasury has advised the treasurer to make no payments on account of the salary of Theodore F. Singiser, newly elected delegate to the house of representatives from Idaho, until his accounts as secretary of the Territory, which office he has just vacated, have been adjusted. There is nothing wrong in the accounts, which are now in process of settlement. Treasurer Gilfillan says he cannot refuse to advance Singiser his salary when it becomes due, as he does not believe he has authority to withhold the salary of any public officer, unless it be shown he is indebted to the government.

A report is current that a short time before the adjournment of congress an attempt was made by some persons unknown to assassinate Secretary Blaine, by shooting into a carriage in which he was seated, while returning from one of the night sessions at the capital. Mr. Blaine treats the matter lightly, and says the hole through the windows of the carriage in which he rode, was probably made by a pebble thrown by some boy with a "devil's sling." His family, however, are said to take a more serious view of the occurrence.

The failure of the river and harbor bill will entail unusual loss at Hell Gate, N. Y. This is one of the few improvements not done by contract. The laborers, many of whom are skilled in the work they have to do, will be discharged and may scatter over the country, and when the government is ready to go on with the work green hands will have to be employed.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

In regard to the charges in Gov. Butler's message that traffic in the bodies of pauper dead at the state alm house has been carried on a long time, the Boston Journal prints a statement to the effect that of 2,800 deaths in ten years, 500 bodies have been delivered to medical colleges according to law. There is no record of the disposition of the remaining 2,200. They were supposed buried in the potters field, but it is alleged that some graves have no body. There are four representatives-elect, besides Ochiltree, against whom the government has judgements. An effort will be made to prevent them from drawing their salaries until these claims are settled. Since he was incarcerated he has been in the hospital two-thirds of the time. He is weak, emaciated, and very nearly gone. Accompanied by his brother-in-law he has started for his father's home in Logan county, Ky. There is some speculation as to the effect of Hite's pardon upon Frank James' prospects. FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

The business of the house of commons is in a greater muddle than ever. The general impatience of the members as well as the public would be shown much more decidedly than it is, but for the fact, which is privately known, that the government is really on the track of all the chief conspirators of Ireland. Mr. Gladstone did not throw away his time while he was apparently amusing himself in Cannes, and is most sanguine now that the entire organization acting against the government in Ireland, and connected with the Phoenix park murderers, will be brought to justice. The flight of Mr. Egan shows that the game is now up, but in spite of all reports to the contrary, no real clue has yet been found to the mysterious "No. 1."

London dispatch: Twelve thousand pounds has just been raised here to defray the cost of representing holders of Virginia bonds and vindicating their right before tribunals in the United States. Points for Pensioners—Circular.

The following circular has been issued by the commissioner of pensions and approved by the secretary of the interior:

The following regulations are prescribed for the purpose of carrying into effect as speedily as possible the provisions of the act of congress, approved March 3, 1883, increasing to $30 per month the pensions of those who lost a leg at or above the knee, or an arm at or above the elbow, and of those who have been so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor, but not so much as to require regular personal aid and attendance, and who are now receiving pensions at the rate of $24 per month, and to $24 per month the pensions of those who have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally or permanently disabled in the same, or otherwise so disabled as to render their incapacity to perform manual labor, equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot, now receiving $18 per month. Inasmuch as the said act has immediate effect upon such admitted cases as have been adjudicated at the rates of $24 and $18 per month, respectively, no formal application by the beneficary is necessary to be made, other than to forward to the commissioner of pensions the pension certificate accompanied by a letter stating, in the hand riting of the pensioner, his present postoffice adress. As soon as possible after the receipt of the pension certificate aforesaid, the commissioner will re-issue to him a new certificate for his new rate, and will forward the same to the proper pension agent to insert the name of such pensioner on the roll at the increased rate and to make to the pensioner proper payment. In case of amputation the certificate will be reissued without further medical examination. The intervention of an agent or attorney in such admitted cases as are affected by this act, being unnecessary, will not be recognized.

The Yellowstone Park Lease.

The secretary of the interior on Saturday last executed a lease to the Yellowstone National Park company for ten acres of land in seven tracts in the park for hotel purposes. The lease is signed by Henry M. Teller on behalf of the United States, and Carroll T. Hobart of Fargo, Dak., Henry F. Douglas of Ft. Yates, and Rufus Hatch of New York city.

It has been considerably modified since the first protocol was drawn, and great care has apparently been taken to exclude all objectionable provisions and to guard against any unwise concessions. The ground leased includes ten acres in different parts of the reservation, carefully specified in the lease, outside of and a considerable distance from any of the natural wonders. The company undertakes to make certain stipulated improvements to erect a hotel with accommodations for 200 guests, with necessary attachments and apparatus to secure the comfort of visitors. There is no stipulation for transportation facilities, but probably these may be provided under the general terms of the lease. There are careful prohibitions and stipulations to prevent extortion, injury to the park, or injury to the rights of the government as original and only proprietor of the ground. All schedules of charges must be submitted to the secretary of the interior for his approval; any rules and regulations established by him must be obeyed; the lessees are forbidden to injure or destroy game or natural curiosities, or to exclude the public from the enjoyment of them, or to remove or sell any valuable mineral products. They may be summarily expelled upon any violation of the terms of the lease. The rental is nominal, only $2 per acre, and the lease runs ten years unless sooner terminated. The sole object of the contract seems to be to provide suitable accommodation for visitors without putting restrictions upon their enjoyment of the natural beauties of the park.

Failure of the Wiggins Prophecy.

Up to Saturday morning there was nothing to indicate unusual disturbances in the weather in any part of the country, though Wiggins insists that his pet monster was roaring across the Pacific, ready to strike the western shores of the continent during the day. There was a blizzard in the Red River valley Friday, but it does not need a Canadian weather prophet to predict this in March. Everywhere else the weather is much as usual at this season.

At Ottawa, Canada, great interest was taken in Wiggin's storm. The weather Friday was spring-like and the question was asked "Where is the storm?" In an interview Wiggings said that there seemed to be a general misunderstanding as to the time that the great storm would begin, and it would not strike this continent.

Saturday the weather prophet had been so sorely troubled in mind that he was unable to sleep for the past few nights, and to add to his discomforture threatening letters are said to have poured in from all sides. He is heartily sick of the business and longs for Tuesday next, so that his mind may be relieved. It is said that a large crowd of excited women called upon the professor recently, and asked where they could find a place of safety during the progress of the storm. He quieted them by saying Ottawa would only experience the tail end of the shock.

Wiggins managed to raise a storm of public apprehension, which has been nearly as disastrous in some localities as a mild hurricane. The Atlantic coast fishermen have been afraid to go out, and a fish famine has ensued in the Eastern cities, while hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost to the trade by the interruption of work.

Opening of the Star Route Defense.

The star routers entered defiantly on their defense last Wednesday, with Congressman Belford of Colorado, as the first witness. The main point of his testimony was that he had gone in person to the postoffice department to urge Brady to expedite routes in the San Juan, country, where a sudden accession of population required largely improved postal service. An attempt was made by Ingersoll to get in a denial from Belford of Rerdell's statement that money was paid the Colorado congressman, but the court sustained an objection, on the ground that there was better evidence in existence, namely, Brady's check-book stubs. This evidence the defense were not particularly anxious to introduce. A dramatic scene was produced by Belford's making a bold declaration from the bar, after leaving the witness stand, that he never received the check alluded to. Judge Wylie fined him $100 for contempt of court. Ingersoll interceded for a remission of the fine, and finally offered to pay it himself. With this the court was appeased, and Belford took his departure.

Ex-Senator Windom's Plans.

The Winona Republican gives the following: In a private letter written to a friend in this city Senator Windom says:

I am looking forward to the freedom of private life with pleasure, and if any who call themselves my enemies imagine that I am consumed with grief on account of the loss of the position, they are greatly mistaken. So far as I am personally concerned, there are several things I would quite as lief do as to remain in the senate. I have seen statements in some of the papers that I am going to make my residence in New York. I wish to say to you that I have no intention to change my residence from Minnesota. I love the state and her people, and shall continue to make it my home; although I may be in New York some time to carry out certain business engagements, but have no idea of locating there. Say to my friends that we are quite as happy as we would have been had I been re-elected. My greatest regret is that I may not be in a position to aid my friends who have done so much for me, as I would like to.

Bad Crop Outlook in England.

The outlook is decidedly forbidding with English farmers. In the Midland counties there have been but three fair days in the past ninety; the farmers have not sown their winter wheat, and the raising of spring wheat is such a doubtful experiment that but a small acreage will be devoted to it. In some regions miles and miles of land are under water, and no cropping will be attempted this season. This backward season is the ninth consecutive year of either failure or partial crop. The situation is one full of despair to the poor farmer, from whom the wealthy land owner will inexorably require the usual rental, regardless of the elements. This is in black contrast to reports in the United States, where the data all point to a good crop.

He Ought to be Hanged.

At Caseyville, Ill., Catherine Edwards, a young lady of eighteen, was shot and killed by John Jacobs, an intimate friend, who sought to frighten and have some fun with her by pointing a shot-gun and snapping a cap at her. The gun exploded and to Jacobs' great surprise and horror proved to be loaded, and the young lady received the charge of shot in her left breast, and died almost instantly. Jacobs surrendered himself and is almost crazy over the event.

Complexion of the Next Congress.

In the list of members elect to the next congress, as revised and corrected, there wil be 191 democrats, 120 republicans, 2 independent democrats, 2 independent republicans, 2 greenbackers and 6 readjusters, with one district in Mississippi in dispute and one in Indiana made vacant by the death of Herron, democrat. The two independent republicans are Ochiltree of Texas and Lyman of Massachusetts. The independent democrats are Wenans of Wisconsin and York of North Carolina.

Chess with Living Pieces.

The English papers give an account of a game of chess with living pieces that was played at Winchester, in the Guildhall, for a charitable purpose. An area of 570 superficial feet on the floor of a large hall, covered with squares of black and white cloth, formed the chess board, and the banks of seats of spectators were placed so that the onlookers had a view across the board from side to side. At the appointed time the "pieces" filed into the room and ranged themselves in order. The pawns in Tudor hats, slashed and puffed tunics in different colors, and wearing long colored hose, were got up after the pages in the olden times, those of opposite sides being distinguished uniformly by white and black shoes, while for the other pieces the costumers, Messrs. Harrison, of Bow Street, had devised more vivid combinations of the style suggested by drawings of Elizabethan dresses. The kings wore long cloaks of velvet, with jewelled collars and sword-belts. The knights appeared in the morions and breast-plates of men-at-arm; and the bishops on one side of the board wore capes and mitres of white silk, heavily embroidered with gold, and on the other cassocks and berettas of cardinal red. The rooks were distinguished by pasteboard castles as head-dress. The players who directed the movements of the pieces were seated at a little table on a dais at one end of the hall, and the moves they made on the ordinary chessboard between them were called out alternately by sergeants of the Sixty Rifles. The "pieces" had been so well drilled that they all stood with stolid fortitude during the long pauses which occurred between the moves. The proceeds of the entertainment are to be applied partly to paying off a debt on St. Lawrence's Church and partly to the funds of the Winchester Association for the cure of Friendless Girls.

The Farmer and "the Gentleman."

From Chamber's Journal

"One day," said this gentleman, "before harvest, I met a fashionably dressed person with a large handful of ears of wheat taken from my fields. I saluted him respectfully, and expressed my admiration of the beauty of the wheat. 'Yes,' said he, 'it is truly a fine sample, and does the farmer great credit who grew it.' I acknowledged the compliment, asked him from which one of my fields he took it. After he had pointed it out he assured me he always liked to take a good sample home as it interested the ladies. Upon this, noticing with admiration the style of his coat, I asked him to allow me to look at the skirt. He readily did so, and I quietly took out my pen-knife and cut a large piece from the tail. The gentleman bounced and swore, but I told him I always took samples of cloth as I found they greatly interested my wife. I added, that he had no more right to take my wheat than I to take his coat, and that I wished the public to bear this truth in mind." This was experience bought with a vengeance.

In the Pennsylvania senate yesterday the senate bill to resolve to the state the property of telegraph companies which consolidate with competing lines, was again considered and passed finally, by a vote of 30 yeas, nays none, and the bill was then sent to the house of concurrence.

Minnesota Forestry Association.

At a meeting of the Minnesota State Forestry association held in St. Paul on the 9th, with Hon. George L. Becker in the chair the election of officers to serve for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, George L. Becker; vice presidents, first district, William Somerville, Eyota; second district, O. B. Turrell, Redwood; third district, G. W. Fuller, Litchfield; fourth district, J. H. Stevens, Minneapolis; fifth district, Loren Listoe, Fergus Falls; secretary, Leonard B. Hodges; treasurer, J. F. Williams; executive committee, Prof. Porter, State University; Ignatus Donnelly, Nininger; Herman Trott, Gen. J. W. Bishop, and ex-Gov Marshall, St. Paul.

It was decided to issue a new edition of the Tree Planters' Manual, to be prepared by the secretary and treasurer, and of which 10,000 copies will be issued during the next two years. The secretary was instructed to communicate with the governor, asking for the use of the hall of the house of representatives for the meeting of the National Forestry association, which is to be held in this city next August. The association starts off on its two years work with brighter prospects than ever before. Its officers are determined to do all that can be done to encourage forestry, and having abundant means, and with growing interest on the subject, the next few months will see some valuable work done.

Minnesota Land Cases Decided for the Settlers.

Washington Special: The commissioner of the general land office to-day rendered a decision covering thirty-five cases similar to the Julia Graham case recently decided by the secretary of the interior. These cases are all located in Minnesota. They involve lands now embraced in the limits of railroad grants, but which were entered by soldiers under the act of March, 1864, before the grants were made. The claims not having been perfected or concealed, the question arose whether the lands should be included in railroad land grants afterward made. Prior to April 3, 1879, it was held by the interior department that land conveyed by uncanceled homestead entries at the date when the right of the company attached was thereby excepted from the grants, by the reason of the fact that they were embraced in soldiers' entry at the date of the grants. Under this rule hundreds of entries, including those in question, were made in Minnesota, and valuable improvements were put upon the land. On the date mentioned, however, Secretary Schurz rendered a decision in the well-known Kriskem case in favor of the company, which has been disastrous to the claims of many settlers. Last year the commissioner of the general land office rendered a decision in the Graham case favorable to the settlers, and not long ago this decision was affirmed by the secretary. The only peculiarity in the cases decided to-day is the fact that some of the land involved was sold by the railroad companies after the decision of Secretary Schurz, but is now claimed under the recent decision by settlers who have entered it in the regular way. Some of this land embraces valuable town sites, and is now claimed by parties who entered it under the pre emption or homestead laws. The commissioner sustained these entries, and will give the settlers a good title to the land.

Minnesota State University.

At a meeting of the Board of Regents at St. Paul on Thursday last W. W. Folwell, president of the university, tendered his resignation, which was accepted. The board then proceeded to a ballot for a person to fill the chair of political science, incidently rendered vacant by the foregoing resignation. All the votes being cast for William W. Folwell, he was duly declared elected, to enter on his duties at the end of his term as president. It is understood that Prof. Folwell will also retain the oversight of the library.

The following were elected professors of the medical department of the university.

Preventive Medicine—Dr. C. N. Hewitt, of Red Wing.

Practice of Medicine—Dr. Franklin Staples, of Winona.

Surgery—Dr D. W. Hand, of St. Paul.

Obstetrics—Dr. W. H. Leonard, of Minneapolis.

Anatomy—Dr. Millard, of Stillwater.

On motion of Regent Hubbard, Regents Sibley, Pillsbury, Clark and Davis were appointed a committee to select and recommend to the board a person to fill the office of president to succeed Prof. Folwell. The board then adjourned to meet at the call of the chair.

Hamline University Will be Built at Once.

At a meeting of the trustees held on Thursday last, Bishop Foss presiding, it was unanimously decided to rebuild at once, and a separate committee was appointed, to be known as the building committee. The committee, including the executive committee and two others, consists of the following gentlemen: Bishop Foss J. F. Chaffee, R. Forbes, E. F. Mearkle, M. G. Morton, B. F. Nelson and C. D. Strong. It was decided to rebuild on the old foundation, if practicable, and a number of plans were inspected and discussed, but no choice made. The committee reported that of the $25,500 received as insurance, $16,000 which was owing on building had been paid, leaving a balance of only $10,000 on hand. It was decided to appeal to the public and all friends of education for the necessary amount, which was placed at $40,000. Of this sum the Hennepin avenue M. E. church has pledged $6,000, and at a meeting the sum of $10,635 was raised, the following being the larger subscriptions: T. A. Harrison, $5,000; M. G. Norton, $2,000; J. F. Chaffee, $1,000; B. F. Nelson, $500; J. H. Murphy, $500; C. D. Strong, $500; Bishop Foss, $300; E. F. Mearkle, $135.

Rev. D. C. John, president resigned his office.

The total of bridge appropriations, passed by the last legislature, amounts to $67,050. The estimated receipts into the fund from which they are payable are $44,000 for 1883, and it is believed that the receipts of 1884 will be large enough to meet the balance.

The residence of Mr. J. W. Rollmann, in Faribault, was destroyed by fire Saturday to the extent of about $1,200 covered by insurance.

Robert Estes, aged eighteen years, is the young man who robbed the contribution box of the Lake City Methodist church of about $25. He is a son of Dr. D. C. Estes and a law student in the office of Judge Card. He pleaded guilty, refunded the money, and was fined $10 and costs.

August Strohschein and wife of Lyon county have been in the habit of locking their five little children—the oldest but five years old—in the house while they, the parents, would go off to parties. They went home from a party about 1 o'clock one night last week and found the baby on the floor frozen to death.

A man named George Brown was killed by a falling tree in the town of Germania, Todd county.

Thomas Henderson, for many years sheriff of Anoka county, died in Anoka on Friday last.

A street railway company has been organized in St. Cloud, with a capital of $250,000.

Below are appended the appointments for lectures on educational topics of Superintendent Kiehle, of the department of public instruction, for the months of March and April: Luverne, March 21; Rushford, March 23; Morris, March 27; Blue Earth City, March 29; Austin, April 3; Waseca, April 10; Lac qui Parle, April 18; New Ulm, April 26; Pipe Stone City, April 20; St. James, May 2.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

The dome of heaven is not half so deep,
As a true woman's love;
The silver sentinels may fall asleep
Upon their beats above.
Her heart is wakeful still. It is its rest
If it can guard the one to it the best.

Go pluck a spray from yonder budding bush,
And, meeting the red day,
The inextinguishable morning push
Back into streaks of gray;
With thy own feeble breath blow out the sun,
Thou canst not quench her love, if once 'tis won.

It is the shield, the trumpet and the spear
In the campaign of life;
The warrior without it well may fear;
Unarmed he seeks the strife.
Yes, it is deeper than the blue above,
For 'tis an exiled gleam of heaven's love.

"CHALK YOUR OWN DOOR."

His proper name was Jeremiah Marden, but he had not been in the village a week before everybody called him Jerry Marden, and within six weeks he was known as Jerry Muddle. The giver is unknown—for who ever knows the giver of nicknames—but the reason for its being bestowed was that Jerry was always muddled with drink.

He was a very good shoemaker, but he stood no chance with George Stevens, a sober man, and so drifted into becoming a cobbler.

Jerry's one idea was to get a job, and having done it, to invest the proceeds in drink at his favorite beer shop, the "Oram Arms."

The consequence was that Jerry was seldom sober, and had he not possessed an iron constitution, two years of such a life must have killed him; but he dragged on, working to-day and idling to-morrow, and drinking whenever drink could be got, and finally he drifted into debt.

His score at the "Oram Arms" was a large one, and the chalks stood up against him like files of soldiers, but Jerry ignored their existence—paying on a little now and then, and drinking more, each time increasing the army of debt against him, until one evening Richard Rewitt, the landlord of the aforesaid "Oram Arms," cried "halt!"

"I can't go on any longer, Jerry," he said. "The last sum I had of you was three shillings, and you have paid nothing for a fortnight."

"Work is slack," murmured Jerry, "but the harvest is coming on and then everybody will have their soling and heeling done, and I shall be able to pay you off."

"Perhaps so," returned Mr. Rewitt, "but you will have as much as you can do to square off what there is up there. Look at them. Those chalks are a standing disgrace to any man. You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

Jerry looked at the accusing marks, and really felt aghast at the long list against him. The inner door of the bar was a regular blackboard, and he trembled before it.

Now when Jerry first came to the "Oram Arms" the landlord was very polite, and spoke as softly as you please to him. No spider courteously entreating a fly to enter into his parlor could have been more oily-tongued or smiled a more persuasive smile—that is, presuming that spiders do smile, which is just possible; but when Jerry got into the toils and had been well confined in the web, mine host put on another face and tone.

"If you drink," he said, "you must expect to pay for it. My brewer would stand no nonsense from me, and I must have my money from you."

"Only one pint," pleaded poor Jerry.

"Not half a pint," replied the landlord. "Go home and work and pay your debts like a man."

The entrance of a customer with ready money cut short the conversation, and Jerry stood back a pace or two while the other was being served. When that was done and the beer drank and the stranger gone, Jerry made a final appeal.

"I have been a good customer to you, Mr. Rewitt. Almost every penny I have earned has come into your till. I have nigh lived on beer, if living it can be called, and my wife and children have had to shift how they could for bread."

"That is nothing to me," said the landlord.

"Let me have one pint."

"Have you the impudence to ask for it with this shameful lot of chalks staring you in the face?"

Jerry did not reply, but he took a long and earnest look at the recording files, and drawing his hand across his dry mouth hurried out of the "Oram Arms."

"Who is that you have been talking to, Richard?" inquired Mrs. Rewitt, entering the bar from a room behind.

"Jerry Muddle," was the reply. "I have stopped his drink till he pays up."

"Then he will go to the 'Green Goose,' and get his drink there," said Mrs. Rewitt.

"They won't trust him a penny," replied her husband, with a grin—"he has tried it on and failed, and so I have got him. If he don't pay up, I will make him."

"There's nothing to get out of the house," said Mrs. Rewitt, shaking her head. "I have heard that there's not a chair for them to sit down upon; and Jerry's wife—clean and tidy as she manages to keep herself—looks more like a skeleton than a woman."

"That is Jerry's lookout," replied Mr. Rewitt, coolly. "If he can't afford it, he shouldn't drink."

The subject was dismissed, and Jerry forgotten in the noise and bustle of the usual business. About 9 o'clock Jerry's wife, to the astonishment of both Mr. Rewitt and his wife, appeared in the bar; but not, as they supposed, for drink.

"My husband tells me," she said, "that he has a heavy score here. How much is it?"

"I am almost too busy to tell you," replied the landlord, "but if it is pressing I will reckon it up."

"It is pressing, and I will be very thankful if you will let me know at once what it is," returned the poor woman, who was indeed, wan and pale, and almost justified the title of skeleton, which Mrs. Rewitt had given her.

The landlord went through the chalks twice, and finally announced that Jerry was indebted to him to the amount of £2 17s and 4½d. Jerry's wife received the announcement with a look of quiet dismay, thanked the landlord, and then left the house.

"I suppose she is thinking to make an effort to pay it off," said Mr. Rewitt, addressing his better half, "and I hope she will; but I fancy it will be a little too much for her."

For a whole week nothing was seen or heard of Jerry; but at the end of that time his wife appeared and put down five shillings on the counter.

"Will you please take that off the amount, sir," she said, "and give me the receipt?"

This was done with a gracious smile, and Jerry's wife departed. Mr. Rewitt announced his having hit the nail on the head. The wife of the cobbler was making an effort to clear off her husband's debt.

At the end of the second week a second five shillings was paid, and then harvest came on—truly a harvest to the agricultural laborer, as at that time he gathers in clothing, and whatever necessaries his harvest money will enable him to procure. All the tradesmen in the little village were busy, and even Jerry was reported to be full-handed. But he did not come near the "Oram Arms" for drink.

On the third week Jerry's wife brought ten shillings, and on the fourth, fifteen, to the great joy and satisfaction of Mr. Rewitt, whose joy, however, was alloyed by the fear that he had lost a customer. He resolved to look Jerry up as soon as another installment of his account was paid.

Nothing was brought for a fortnight, and the landlord congratulated himself on not having hastily sought his absent customer, who still owed him over a pound, but the appearance of Jerry's wife with the balance had the effect of making him think otherwise. There was no display in putting down the money—it was quickly done—but the happy light in the woman's eyes as she took the receipt spoke more than mere words or actions.

"I have been hasty with Jerry," said Mr. Rewitt, when another whole month had elapsed without Jerry appearing. "He promised to pay at harvest time, and he did; but I have offended him, and the 'Green Goose' has caught his custom."

"Go and see him," suggested his wife.

"I intended to do so. Here, give me out Tom's boots; they want a patch on the side; it will be an excuse for my dropping in upon him."

"That isn't much of a job for him, seeing that you give George Stevens the best of work," said Mrs. Rewitt.

"Stevens works better than Jerry," replied her husband; "you can always trust him to do his work when it is promised, but Jerry keeps the things for weeks together."

"That is true, but I have got a pair of boots that want new fronts, and can wait a week or two. Take them."

"I'll take both," said Richard Rewitt, "nothing like baiting your hooks while you are at it."

Armed for the reconquest of Jerry, the landlord set forth in the morning—that being a slack time when he could be easily spared from home. Outside were a couple of loafers, with no money and no credit. Mr. Rewitt favored them with a lofty nod of indifference.

Jerry's cottage was in the middle of the village, standing back about fifty feet from the middle of the road, and although its inside poverty had been well known, the outside, thanks to his wife, looked quite as well as its neighbors. Therefore Mr. Rewitt was not in the least surprised to see it look bright and gay on that beautiful autumn morning.

As he approached the door he heard the sound of Jerry's hammer upon the lapstone, and, to his utter amazement, the voice of Jerry caroling a cheerful ditty which used occasionally to come out within the tap room as the song of the raven. Raising the latch the landlord of the "Oram Arms" peeped in.

"Good morning, Jerry," he said.

"Oh! Is that you, Mr. Rewitt?" replied Jerry, looking up. "Come in."

Jerry looked up, wondrous clean, and had even been shaved that very morning. His blue shirt looked clean; and he actually had a collar on.

Mr. Rewitt was so overcome by the change that he stood still with his boots under his arms, forgetting that they formed part of his mission.

"You look very well, Jerry," he said, at last.

"Never felt better in my life," replied Jerry. "I wish I could say the same of you. You look whitish."

"I have got a bit of a cold," replied the other, "and I have been shut up a good deal with business lately. Trade has been brisk; but how is it that we have not seen you?"

"Well—the fact is, sir," said Jerry, rubbing his chin, "I have been busy wiping off your score."

"But it's done, man," said Mr. Rewitt, cheerfully; "the door is quite clean as far as you are concerned."

"I am glad of that."

"Others have got their share," said the landlord, facetiously, "but I think we could make room for you, if you look us up."

"No, thanks, sir," returned Jerry. "I have had enough of chalking on other people's doors, and now I chalk on my own."

"Chalk on your own!"

"Yes, sir; have the goodness to turn round and look behind. There is my door, half full."

"It is a wise thing to keep account yourself," said the landlord, who hardly knew what to make of it, "for mistakes will happen; but—"

"No mistake can happen, sir," interrupted Jerry, "for I am the only party as keeps that account."

"But who trusts you to do that?"

"Nobody—I trust myself," replied Jerry. "The marks that were on your door showed what I did drink, and those on mine show what I did not drink."

A little light had got into the landlord's brain, and he had a pretty good idea of what was coming, but he said nothing.

"That night when you spoke to me about the chalks on the door being a standing disgrace to me was the night of my waking," continued Jerry. "No man could have lectured me better than you did, and I thank you for it from the bottom of my heart. As I left your house I vowed to touch drink no more, and I came home and told my wife so, and we both joined in earnest prayer that I might have the strength to keep my vow. The next morning I went over to George Stevens' and asked him how I could go about signing the pledge. He helped me like a man—and it was done."

With his eyes wandering to and fro between Jerry and the chalks upon the door, the amazed landlord still remained silent. Jerry went on:

"My wife wanted to work herself to death to keep me," he said, "but I said no. You do what you can to keep the children until my debts are paid, and then I'll keep you and the children too. So I went to work paying right and left, and when all was paid off I began to do what I ought to have done years ago—feed my wife and children. I had enough to spare, and would have spent some with you. And many's the time I've been tempted to go—and I'm tempted still, but when the feeling comes over me I take a drink of water or a cup of tea, put twopence into the box I've got on purpose, and score a chalk on the door. All of them chalks are so many twopence saved."

Mr. Rewitt was unable to make any particular remark, but he murmured in a confused manner, "You've got a lot of 'em."

"Yes, there is a large family," replied Jerry, complacently, "and the more I look at them the better I like them. There is not much standing disgrace about that lot; credit, if anything."

"Oh, yes—yes," returned the landlord; "but—dear me—this cold in my head is quite distressing. You must have a large box for all of your twopence."

"When I get six together I take them to the postoffice," replied Jerry; "there's a bank there better than any till. They give nothing out, but banks like that return you more than you put in. Until I began to keep my own chalks I had no idea how much your till swallowed up. You would not trust me for a pint, but I can have my money out of the bank whenever I want it."

"That's something," said Mr. Rewitt, tartly.

"It is everything to a man who has a wife and children to keep," replied Jerry. "The best of us have sickness and trouble and rainy days, and then it is a great thing to have something to fall back upon. It is better to keep yourself than go to the parish. There's another thing, too, about these chalks of mine—your's went down before my wife and children were fed; mine go down after that's done. I think that my chalks are the better of the two. So I say to all, 'Chalk your own door.'"

Mr. Rewitt had nothing to say; he could not deny it, and he could not admit it, but took refuge, like other heathen men, in flight. With the boots under his arm he hastened home and presented himself before his wife in a rather excited condition.

"What is the matter, Richard?" she asked.

"Nothing particular," he replied, "except that Jerry Muddle has joined the temperance lot, and he seems so firm in it that I don't believe he will ever touch a drop again."

Richard Rewitt, of the "Oram Arms," was right. And Jerry, who bears the name of Muddle no longer, but is called by the name to which he is entitled by right of birth, viz., that of Marden, has not touched a drop of strong drink from the day of his reformation to this. His door has been filled again and again with the score he records in his own favor, and the beer he has not drank is everywhere around him in the form of a comfortable home, a respectable amount in the bank, and a goodly investment in a building society.

Disastrous Snow Slides.

Ogden Special: The exceptionally severe winter has resulted in a large number of snow slides throughout the mining regions in the mountain districts of Utah, Idaho and Colorado. So far the loss of life has been less than usual. In the Little Cottonwood district, near Alta, some seventy-five miles south of this city, where the famous Emma and other well known mines are located, a snow slide occurred last week near the Emma property, plunging down the mountain side, and almost burying the town beneath it. Two years ago a snow slide occurred in the gulch east of the town, and running over the Grizzly mines, carried away the miners' boarding houses, crushing the huge logs and timbers as if they were jackstraws, resulting in the death of a number of persons, the only one escaping being a small child in its mother's arms, whose body protected it from injury. A telegram just received from Teller, Colo., in the mining region of North park, states that a mail carrier on snow shoes had just arrived from the opposite side of the range, giving an account of a terrible snow slide that occurred last week at the Tuponis mine, in Middle park, by which three men lost their lives, the fourth having a very narrow escape. The Tuponis is located on the west side of the great continental divide, and is owned by parties residing at Hot Sulphur Springs, Colo. Four men, named Flinn, Duty, Williams and Booth, were working on it at the time. On the day of the accident a heavy snow storm was raging, and the men did not go to work as usual, remaining in their cabin. The avalanche occurred about 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon, without any warning, a vast body of snow suddenly breaking loose and sweeping down the mountain side, carrying everything before it. The cabin of the men was completely demolished, the inmates being buried beneath the snow and debris to the depth of several feet. Flinn was the only one rescued alive. He was badly used up, but his injuries are not fatal. He says he heard Duty calling for help and struggling for several hours, when everything became quiet, and he supposed all had escaped except himself, which gave him some hope. He was rescued in about thirty hours from the time of the catastrophe. Two men, named Boyer and Stokes, were approaching the cabin at the time of the snow slide, and discovered it in time to save themselves and give the alarm. It was supposed that the men were all dead, and unfortunately no effort was made until the next day for their recovery.

A cold seems a small affair. Most people neglect it. Who minds it? Yet a cold may turn to consumption, and then follows almost certain death. Take a cold in time, then; that is, take Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant, the well-known standard remedy for coughs, colds, consumption, asthma, bronchitis and all pulmonary complaints, and your cold will disappear, as well as all apprehension of danger.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.

If you fine buckwheat cakes would make
One quart of buckwheat flour take;
Four tablespoonfuls then of yeast;
Of salt one teaspoonful at least;
One handful Indian meal and two
Good tablespoonfuls of real New Orleans molasses; then enough
Warm water to make of the stuff
A batter thin. Beat very well;
Set it to rise where warmth doth dwell.
If, in the morning, it should be
The least bit sour, stir in free
A very little soda that
Is first dissolved in water hot.
Mix in an earthen crock, and leave
Each morn a cupful in to give
A sponge for the next night, so you
Need not get fresh yeast to renew.

In weather cold this plan may be Pursued ten days successfully,
Providing you add every night
Flour, salt, molasses, meal in right
Proportions, beating as before,
And setting it to rise once more.
When baking make of generous size
Your cakes; and if they'd take the prize,
They must be light and nicely browned.
Then by your husband you'll be crowned
Queen of the kitchen; but you'll bake,
And he will, man-like, "take the cake."

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Economy in Carpets.

The desire for a beautiful home is not confined to those who can gratify a taste as soon as they realize its existence. Throughout the world severe and sometimes heroic struggles are going on all the time to find pleasure for the artistic nature in daily surroundings, while yet the matter of dollars and cents stands like a roaring lion in the way. For such readers as these—who never spend a dollar without stretching it to its utmost buying capacity, and seldom think of an expended dollar without half wishing it had been otherwise spent or not spent at all—a few hints are here gathered together for decorative furnishing at slight comparative expense.

The first item in house furnishing is usually carpets, or at least it was until the present æsthetic rage for waxed floors and Oriental or Morris center carpets.

To this day, however, in thousands of homes, carpets covering every inch of the floor still hold their own and probably do so in our climate where severe winters are possible.

It is rather curious to observe that France, Italy and Germany, hitherto wedded to bare floors and center rugs, are now coming into the full use of unmitigated carpets in the corners as well as the centers of the rooms, just as we are beginning to adopt their mode of doing without. There is no gainsaying that carpets are warm and snug all winter, no matter how full of dirt they may become by spring, when they can be easily cleaned. A carpeted room has a cozy, homelike aspect which no room with a waxed floor can possibly possess, no matter how gorgeous or æsthetic is its central Abuston or Scinde; and it is certainly less trouble to keep it looking cleanly, as all can testify who have had the care of polished wood floors, showing every drop of water, boot-heel mark or speck of dust.

The dull neutral tints, the discharge of all colors, which taste nowadays declares is true art, can easily be arrived at on our floors, without leaving bare, or paying great prices for æsthetic patterns. Many a prairie farmer's wife arrives at the consummation devoutly wished for, but not always attained by her town acquaintances, and has an æsthetic carpet without knowing it, and unknown, probably, too, by all who see it, or contributed to its making.

In one of the prettiest, artistic drawing rooms in Rome, beneath fifteenth century carved oaks, tarsia of the seventeenth century and mosaics with a good many Turkey rugs, is a carpet of soft brown, woven in and out with threads of delicate golden. Everybody who sees this carpet for the first time speaks of its unique beauty, and then the artist hostess laughs and explains that it cost her 50 cents a yard, and that it is made from cast-off woolen garments cut in strips and woven "hit or miss;" that it is, in fact, nothing in the world but a "rag carpet" which she had made herself, believing that she could thus get the color she had set her heart upon better than by ransacking Italian stores.

Economy in Dress.

It is quite safe to say that a lady with good taste and a little time at her disposal, can dress comfortably and becomingly on $50 a year. Of course she must dress plainly, but her clothing may be neat and stylish, and of so refined an air that strangers would set her down at once for a lady. Let us verify these statements and see what can be done with $50 a year.

In the first place, it must be laid down as an invariable rule that one must select a good wearing quality in everything she buys, so that the garments will be worth making over as long as there is a whole piece left in them; and she must make her own clothes, including cutting and fitting. The cut paper patterns, for sale almost everywhere, are excellent helps. This, by the way, suggests the idea that every young girl ought to learn dressmaking. It is a very useful acquisition, even an accomplishment, and one that is easily obtained.

Five dollars' worth a year, added to one's stock on hand, would easily keep a good lady's plain underwear, both for winter and summer. One year the summer stock could be replenished; the next the winter, and so on. About half a dozen pairs of stockings would be necessary, and four pairs of shoes—one pair fine kid shoes at $4.50, one pair stout walking shoes at $2.50, one pair rubbers, 50 cents, and one pair best high winter overshoes, $3. The last, however, would easily be worn two seasons, making the yearly expense only $1.50. Gloves are uncertain articles, but by wearing lisle thread or silk gloves in summer, a lady could easily clothe her hands for $4.50 a year. One should take pains to dress the hands and feet particularly well; shabbiness here seems to be more noticeable than elsewhere. Economy requires that only two new hats be bought each year, one for the warm and one for the cold season. Good materials can be repeatedly worked over, especially for "second best" hats, so that a few good materials each season will keep good the supply.

The careful shopper will tell you that a bargain may be picked up here, and a real treasure there, for a small sum of money. In feathers, never buy a cheap quality. An ostrich tip, with a little care, lasts years, and stands an enormous amount of doing over. Then as to dresses, a silk one is a poor purchase where means are limited, a good worsted article looking nicer, and giving three times the satisfaction. Never buy mixed cotton and wool goods unless under an unusual stress. A good piece of the beautiful all-wool goods offered nowadays is a safe, sure purchase, and will form an excellent background on which to build. Before the day of "cheap" (?) black silks no lady's wardrobe was complete without such a dress, but now even the merchants say that there is lottery in the purchase.

If one could be sure of reliable material no purchase could be in better taste. As far as wrapping goes, aim at simplicity, avoid passementerie (which goes out of style) or cheap fur, which sheds. Invest in something that will last and wear, and save the expense a second season.

Young ladies should avoid cheap lace, which is always vulgar, and substitute the neat frills of mull or linen, which are readily laundried.

In gloves the best must be purchased. Occasionally one may find a good glove in medium shades, elastic and pliable, and at a moderate rate, but as a usual thing judgment must be exercised to an enormous degree.

GENERAL SUGGESTIONS.

A soft black cashmere or good silk dress is more economical for a best dress than any other, particularly if one can have but few dresses. With a change of neck and waist trimming, with an occasional bright ribbon or flower, it can be made suitable for almost any occasion—a wedding, a funeral, the promenade or the theater.

Perhaps no little thing adds so much to a lady's appearance as a fine lingerie. Delicate laces are, of course, prettiest for neck and wrists, but beautiful fichus and ruches can be made cheaply out of simple white mull. With careful laundrying they will last a long time. For the plain, elegant, "tailor-made" suits there is nothing prettier than plain collars and cuffs, with a simple pin or gold button.

Tabulated, our estimates for a year might be about as follows:

Underwear	$ 5 00
Half dozen plain hose	1 50
Four pairs shoes	9 00
Gloves	4 50
Hats and bonnets	7 00
One fine cashmere dress	15 00
Plain cloth walking dress	5 00
One summer cambric dress	2 00
Material for cuffs, collars, etc	1 00
Total	$50 00

This is not an underestimate, as thousands of ladies will acknowledge from their own experience; indeed, many have kept themselves looking respectable for even a smaller sum. Of course, to do so requires a great deal of head work, as well as hand work.

Kitchen Keramics.

Babies' feet are objects of unlimited admiration; the soft curves and outlines and the perfect nails do not in the least suggest the cramped and misshapen form they will take after a while, in all human probability. Thoughtlessness and a mistaken notion of economy cause the lack of beauty and the sense of discomfort about the feet of the half-grown boy or girl. Children are frequently made to wear shoes that they have outgrown because they are not worn out. "Best" shoes are almost always too small when they are purchased, and as they are only worn occasionally, the feet change and enlarge, and are injured by the ill-fitting shoe. The nails should be cared for and looked after by the mother just as conscientiously as the morals of the child. Many an hour of acute pain, as well as of loss to the man or woman, may be charged to the neglect of the nails in childhood. If the discovery is made that the shoe is oppressing the foot and crowding the nails, it would be better to remove the shoe and let the child go without rather than continue its use. If there is danger of a toe nail pressing down in the flesh, it can be avoided by cutting a scallop or point in the center of the nail. This will certainly prevent ingrowing nails.

A novelty in cake is made thus: Bake a loaf of white cake or of corn-starch cake; have the loaf when baked about three inches deep. When done and cold, put on the top of the loaf pieces of orange; these should be cut in the shape and of the size of a caramel. Put them on as close together as possible, and have them smooth or even if you can. Then cover the cake, orange and all, with frosting. If corn-starch cake is made, follow this rule: One cup of flour, one cup of corn starch, one heaping cup of white sugar, half a cup of butter, beaten with the sugar until it is light as cream, one large teaspoonful of baking powder, and the whites of four eggs, beaten to a stiff froth and put in last; a large half cup of sweet milk should be stirred in with the butter and sugar after they are well beaten. This cake does not keep well, and should be eaten while fresh. A nice white cake to be covered with orange is made by using the whites of five eggs, one cup of milk, half a cup of butter, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one cup and a half of sugar, and about three cups of flour.

Here is the most sensible recipe for beef a la mode it has been my good fortune to use. Take three pounds of fresh beef, remove all the fat and gristle; mix some cloves, mace, allspice, black pepper and a little cayenne with a little less than a pint of vinegar, the quantity of spice to be determined by your taste—a tablespoonful of each, with the exception of the cayenne, is the usual allowance—a half a teaspoonful of cayenne is sufficient. Put the meat in a porcelain kettle, and pour the vinegar and spices over it, and a pint of soup stock. It is considered by some cooks a great addition to cut thin slices of bacon and lay them over the meat. Cover the kettle and let the beef cook slowly till perfectly tender. This may be served cold or hot, and with vegetables or without.

Escaloped potatoes are delicious for supper. Butter the bottom and sides of a tin basin; then slice and lay in a layer of cold boiled potatoes; sprinkle some pepper and salt and little lumps of butter over it; then dust it with flour, and put another layer of potatoes, etc., until you have prepared the requisite number potatoes. Over the top put a layer of cracker crumbs to the depth of half an inch; pour over this a little more than one cup of sweet milk—cream if you can get it. Set the basin in the oven, which should be moderately warm, and keep it in there, with a steady fire going, for about half an hour. If you have never tried this dish, please do so.

A correspondent wishes to know how many stitches should be used when knitting strips for a rug. Twenty-eight is the proper number, and then the strips can be cut in two parts, and will ravel easily; when sewing the ravelled wool to the burlap it is a good plan to draw straight lines across it with a pencil; then no time is lost in making crooked lines straight, and the rug will be much more even in appearance. It is a mistake to suppose that it makes no difference how the colors are mixed; taste and good judgment count here as everywhere. When knitting the strips it is altogether best to knit only an inch or two of one color.

It is the custom in most families who give attention to the concerns of the table to serve oatmeal and milk at breakfast. Excellent as this custom is, it may be varied occasionally with good effect. One way to do this is to make a hasty pudding of Graham flour; it should be made like ordinary Indian meal pudding, with the exception that the Graham must first be wet with cold water; it must be stirred constantly; it will require about twenty minutes' steady boiling and should be well salted.

Three tablespoonfuls of oil to one of vinegar, a salt-spoon heaping full of salt, and two-thirds full of black pepper, with a pinch of cayenne, are the proper proportions for a plain salad dressing. To vary this, add a small pickled onion, chopped very fine, or a raw onion and a cucumber pickle, chopped fine. The onion and cucumber pickle, with a little pepper and salt added to a little vinegar, makes an appetizing dressing for cold boiled pigs' feet.

An omelette, with cabbage in it, makes an appetizing side dish. Beat four eggs till they are very light, the whites and yolks separately; to the yolks add a small cup of sweet milk, and pepper and salt to taste; then stir in a cup of cold boiled cabbage, chopped fine; have enough butter in a saucepan to cover the bottom; when hot, pour the omelette in, having stirred the whites of the eggs in first before putting into the pan.

Pretty wall baskets can be made by taking one of the rough straw hats so much worn at the seaside a year or two ago. If a flower or vine is not already embroidered on it, add some such decoration; then line the hat with muslin or silesia, finish the edge with a pleating of ribbon, and tie a ribbon in a knot and fasten to it for a handle. The hat may be flattened by pressure, or by using stout linen thread for that purpose.

To make an excellent soup allow four pounds of beef to two and a half quarts of water, one small onion, one carrot, and a small head of celery. Let these boil for four or five hours. Three-quarters of an hour before dinner strain this soup, salt it, and add a heaping teaspoonful of macaroni, broken in bits; let this boil slowly. Add any other seasoning you like; for some tastes a pinch of curry powder improves it.

Many a deluded child has been cured of a cold by this means: Take a cup of brown sugar and put it in a saucepan to make candy, but instead of adding water in which to dissolve the sugar, put in a little tea made by steeping thoroughwort. This will impart a bitter taste, which is not unpleasant to the child after the first mouthful, and is really a good remedy for a "tickling in the throat."

Durable and pretty covers for a bureau are made of drab aida canvas, with the edge finished with deep scallops crocheted of macreme cord, or make the cover so large that the edge will fall over the edge of the bureau. After the canvas is fringed to the depth of an inch, overcast the canvas so that it will not ravel. A narrow border of worsted above the fringe is a pretty addition.

Every cook knows how long a time it takes, when it can least be spared, to look over one or two quarts of beans. An ingenious friend, who is always trying to save time, says: Put the beans in a colander, and all the fine dirt will be shaken out, and the beans that are specked can be picked out with ease, and in a very short time.

A tasteful scarf for a small table is made of the macreme or fish-cord so much used in fancy work now. Crochet in one broad strip, leaving spaces through which ribbons may be run; let the ribbon extend below the crocheted strip, and let a loop and end hang there as a finish. Simple and inexpensive as this is, it is very ornamental.

Cabbage, cooked as you cook cauliflower, helps to make variety at this season when it is difficult to do so. Cut the cabbage in small pieces and boil until it is perfectly tender; then drain off the salted water and pour over the cabbage a cup of cream, with a lump of butter and some pepper and salt. Serve hot.

If infants' bands knit of Saxony yarn are knit with the old-time "garter stitch" and then when of the desired length are sewed together, they will not shrink when washed, or at least will not be so likely to shrink much. Be careful to make a very flat seam where the ends are joined.

Cold boiled salmon can be made an appetizing dish for supper, by pouring enough boiling vinegar over it to cover it. If left from dinner, the vinegar should be poured on as soon as the salmon is removed from the table. If spice is to your taste, put in some unground allspice.

Jaunty little aprons for home wear and for service at festivals are made of white or brown linen with a border of Kate Greenaway figures across the bottom and a group of figures on the pocket. The figures are usually worked in one color.

When cooking a large fowl or joint of meat it may be covered with a buttered paper to prevent its being scorched.

Lobster broiled and served on toast makes a dainty dish for a lunch or tea.

Special meetings have been held in the First Reformed church, New Brunswick, N. J., for the past two months. The audiences have been very large, and 120 conversions are reported. The interest continues unabated.

EXPECTATION.

When flower time comes and all the woods are gay,
When linnets chirrup and the soft winds blow,
Adown the winding river I will row,
And watch the merry maidens tossing hay,
And troops of children shouting in their play.
And with my thin oars flout the fallen snow
Of heavy hawthorne blossoms as I go,
And shall I see my love at fall of day
When flower time comes?

Oh, yes! for by the border of the stream
She binds red roses to a trim alcove,
And I shall fade into her summer dream
Of musing upon love—nay, even seem
To be myself the very god of love,
When flower time comes!

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Omnipresence of God.

In a recent sermon, Prof. Swing spoke with great force about the Omnipresence of God. In the phenomena of earth, political and social, we seem to see to-day the omnipresence of the Creator. Unable to read God in his form, we see him in his actions. From the mountains and seas, and pines and flowers and skies, where the poets find him whom their soul loves; from the mirror of the inner self-consciousness, where Irma in her rapture on the hights traces her divine birth and death; from the world-motion of bird and fish and brute, where Spinoza found the central Life; from the devout Christian who finds the Creator incarnate in Nazareth, turn and behold in the widening education and spreading happiness and equality of the millions the unfolding omnipresence of the deity. In palaces where only a king dared enter, the people now tread in peace, and the wisdom and teaching once for king's sons are flowing outward toward the millions of the common children of this world. The local and special is reaching outward toward the universal as though God had become weary of a palace and a central home, and were now about to realize the prediction of an old saint who, in love, cried out, "The tabernacle of God is with men. I will be their God and they shall be my people." The scence of advancing and widening and deepening human life is as though the Creator had broken to pieces the ivory throne made for him by human fancy, had torn down the throne-room made and decorated by the childish ages, and placing himself in the front and rear and heart of the moving host, were saying: "You cannot be or stay or go where I am not. I am your Alpha and Omega. In me you live and move and have your being. Go forward, for lo! I am with you to the end, and that end is my power, and love, and eternity."

Winnipeg Churches.

There are eleven religious societies in the new and lively city of Winnipeg, Manitoba; and it is said that their aggregate wealth is estimated at the immense sum of $11,300,000. In the early history of the country the Hudson's Bay company made grants of land to the various churches—Protestant and Catholic. They gave no deed, however, and simply made an entry of the gift of the lands in the company's book. This was considered all that was necessary at the time. The lands were practically valueless then. And the company's promise then was considered much preferable, and in most cases it has been made good. The Roman Catholic church has been the most fortunate, having a title to lands now valued at $10,000,000. On a very small portion of the Roman Catholic possessions the archbishop is assessed $300,000, and for a block valued at $3,000,000 the archbishop has recently refused an offer of $5,000,000. Three Episcopal churches have over $600,000 worth of property, mostly land; the Methodists, $450,000; Presbyterians, $125,000, and the remainder is divided between the Baptists and Congregationalists. A number of costly church buildings have already been erected in Winnipeg, and it is said that two $100,000 structures will be erected either this year or next. Several of the religious societies have speculated in city lands and made a good deal of money in that way.

Moses and Science.

The Jesuit Father Calmer has delivered another lecture before the students of St. Louis university on Moses and Science, of which the following is a brief synopsis: "The Hebrew word 'jom,' in its literal acceptation, may mean a day of twenty-four hours, and the words 'hereb' and 'boker' the evening and the morning of a day. Even taking them in this strictly literal sense, science so far has not proved the ancient literal interpretation to be absurd or repugnant. All that science has advanced rests on an uncertain basis. Geology assumes that God created nothing but matter, which by the natural evolution of its forces formed the earth. This is mere assumption. That God created the earth, as Moses describes it, is just as certain. Moreover, creation is not miraculous action. The points at issue are whether our experience is sufficent to enable us to reason from analogy, and whether all former changes of the earth's surface are to be explained by the agency of forces alike in kind and degree with those now in action. We must grant certain extraordinary perturbations. The whole tendency of the ever-widening range of modern geological inquiry has been to show how little reliance can be placed upon the so-called "laws" of stratigraphical and palæontological successions, and how much allowance has to be made for local conditions. Geology may be compared to a universal history, in which, by the omission of dates, the chronology is thoroughly obscured, and the necessary treatment of each nation by itself conceals the contemporaneity of events. We must be content, therefore, to suspend our judgment and await the progress of events. It may be that future discoveries shall bring to light new points of harmony between the days of Genesis and the periods of geology; it may be they shall demonstrate that no such harmony exists.

Prize Fighters in Church.

The San Francisco Chronicle thus comments on a scandalous occurrence which recently took place in the Metropolitan Baptist Temple of that city: "This sacred building is suddenly turned into an arena for a brutal exhibition of pugilistic 'science.' The auditorium is filled with a profane and drunken crowd, many of whom for the first time find themselves within church walls. On the platform, where the pulpit usually stands, and directly over the font, where some scores of converts have consecrated themselves to the service of Christ, the two sloggers, one of them a man with a world-wide reputation, give and take punishment in the approved manner of the ring, while the air vibrates with profanity and reeks with the odor of intoxicating liquors. The church as a body connived at the vile exhibition in their sanctuary, hoping to gild the ecclesiastical exchequer with worldly gate-money, and with the wages of sin to recoup the failing fortunes of an organization that has for months past been swiftly going to decay.'

A most remarkable religious awakening is in progress in York county, in the State of Maine, through the preaching of the Rev. John T. Vine, the evangelist. He has been preaching nightly for nine weeks in Sanford and East Lebanon, and crowds flock to hear him. Such a revival has not occurred in Sanford for a quarter of a century, and it is still spreading.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

SNOWING.

Slowly down from the low-hung clouds
Flutter the flakes of snow,
Over the country and over the town
Swept by the winds that blow.

Down, down, down, till the frozen earth
Glitters in dazzling white—
Till curves, and wreaths, and fleecy plumes
Are hung from every height;

Down till turret and church-spire blend;
Down till the shadowy trees
Like white-robed guests, with outstretched arms,
Wait in the wintry breeze.

Down they come in a feathery whirl
Like sprites in an airy chase,
Till every tiny separate flake
Has found its resting place.

A Bad Habit.

Little Mattie was always getting into mischief because she would not heed what older and wiser people told her. She always wanted to see for herself if things were just as they were said to be.

One day she told her sister Amy, who was much younger, that she was going to get some honey out of the beehives.

"The bees will sting you," said Amy.

"I am going to see if they will," said Mattie; and she ran to the hive and overturned it.

Out swarmed the bees in great numbers. They were very angry at being disturbed, and lighted on Mattie's face, neck and hands, stinging her so badly that she fell to the ground screaming with pain.

The cook ran out of the kitchen and picked her up. She was sick in bed for several days, and you may be sure she never went near the beehives again.

But she was not cured of meddling. One day she leaned over the well curb to see how deep the well was.

"Take care! you'll fall in," said Amy.

"No, I won't fall in," said Mattie; but just as she spoke over she went.

The well was not very deep, and Mattie did not get hurt at all; but she had time to get very wet and to cry almost a teacupful of tears before her papa came and drew her up in the well-bucket. She caught cold, too, and had to stay in the house for a week, and take very bitter medicine.

But she was just as meddlesome as ever, and it took a very severe lesson to cure her of her bad habit.

One day her brother Joe left his gun in the hall while he went into the kitchen for a drink of water.

"Don't touch that gun, Mattie," he said; "it is loaded."

Mattie was playing with her dolls by the hall door, but as soon as Joe went away she ran to the gun and stroked it with her hands.

She took hold of the gun and tried to lift it, but it was too heavy. It fell to the floor, and went off with a loud noise. And Mattie fell, too, shot through the knee.

It was many weeks before she could play out-doors again, and then she had to walk with a crutch. But she had learned to let things alone. She was cured of her bad habit.

About Girls and Boys

A little boy who lives in our town, says the Rome Sentinel, went to Oswego the other day to see his grandpa. On retiring for the night he was told to say his prayers. He knelt, and, folding his hands reverently, thus unburdened himself: "God bless mamma and the chickens, and grandma, and the horse, and the cows, and the bull and grandpa. Amen."

Two little girls, one eight years old, the other six, sleep in the same chamber. In the morning the elder one says: "Oh, I have had such a nice dream!" "What was it?" "I was in a large pastry cook-shop, and I ate as many rum cakes, strawberry tarts and bon-bons as I wanted." "Was I with you?" asked the little one. "No." And the little one began to sob.—Paris Wit.

A little girl came very near to her mother one morning, saying: "Which is the worst, mamma, to tell a lie or to steal?" The mother, taken by surprise, replied that both were so bad she couldn't tell which was the worst. "Well," said the little one, "I've been thinking a good deal about it, and I've concluded it's worse to lie than to steal. If you steal a thing you can take it back, 'less you've eaten it, and if you've eaten it you can pay for it. But"—and there was a look of awe in the little face—"a lie is forever!"

Some children are singularly dull at the very moment when they are expected to make the best showing. [illegible] took occasion to put her little charge through a sort of catechism every night, called in her mother on one occasion to let her see how nicely her pupil was getting along. "Come, now, darling," she said, "who is it that you love better than father or mother or brother or sister—better than all the world put together?" With a look of innocence that might have been borrowed from the angels, the Christian cherub responded, "Pie!"

The Cat Learns to Dance.

Buzz, the cat, was feasting in the garden. He had a fine bowl of bread and milk, which one of the children had left there. The moon shone brightly, and the cat purred aloud for joy. All at once he cried, "What a night to dance, if there was only a fiddle!"

The wise old mouse sat at the door of his hole, with one eye on the bread and milk. "I will teach you how to dance without a fiddle," cried he. The cat jumped up quickly. "Oh, do show me!" he shouted.

The mouse brought out some pretty paper boots with tassels. "Put these on," said he, "they are fairy boots." This made the cat laugh, and he hastened to draw the boots over his paws.

But there was wax in them, and it tickled his toes. His feet began to go up and down. Then he hopped high in the air, and skipped and spun all about the garden till he was quite out of breath.

"Oh, do stop me," he screamed; "take off these dreadful boots!"

"I only knew how to make you dance," replied the mouse. "I do not know how to stop you."

So poor Buzz had to dance all night, till the boots wore out. But the wise old mouse ate up the bread and milk.

Since then, cats cannot help dancing when they put on paper boots. And a proverb in cat land says, "It takes a friendly fiddle to [illegible] merry heels."

Value of a Name.

Gail in the New York Tribune: Some surprise has been expressed in financial and political circles at Mr. Windom's going into a new stock exchange experiment. One of his friends said to me: "Windom makes the mistake that nearly all men do who are suddenly dropped out of very prominent political life into business. They think they must rush right into some business experiment while they are fresh in the public memory, and fear they will be at once forgotten. Mr. Windom is comfortably situated and has a good name which he should put out sparingly." Efforts have been made to bring him into a railroad scheme, as my informant said, in the vicinity of Mexico.

FACTS FOR THE FARMERS.

Management of Clover Seed.

A crop that is coming more and more into demand in Minnesota is clover. As people go out of wheat raising into stock growing the need of tame and nutritious grasses becomes a pressing want, and timothy and clover are the two kinds generally selected. At present but comparatively little of either is saved in Minnesota, whether owing to the want of proper machinery to hull and thresh it, or general indifference on the part of the farming community to so small a crop. Of its management J. A. Mount of Ind. thus speaks in the Farmer:

To secure a good crop of seed, the first, or hay crop, should be cut early. If pastured, instead of being mowed, stock should be turned off in time for the clover to make a good start before wheat harvest. It will be difficult in print to tell when clover seed is ripe enough to cut. The early heads will be ripe by the time the main crop is in full bloom. The cutting cannot be delayed, without loss, until all the heads are ripe. The early heads, which are the best filled, will lose by shattering before the heads are ripe. The cutting should not be delayed until all the heads have turned brown. I cut while many of the late heads are still in bloom, and while a large proportion of the heads have scarcely a tinge of brown. A self-rake reaper is the best machine with which to cut seed. If the seed is tangled and down, the sickle should be set very low, and the rakes so adjusted as to rake the tangled clover over the sickle bar on to the platform. When the rake clears the platform the bunches will be found to set on end with the heads all up. These bunches hold together and add to the convenience of handling. If the bunches become settled in the stubble by rains, they should be lifted on to dry stubble, so that the air can freely pass under the bunches and dry them, but in no case should the heads be turned under, as the wet weather will then sprout the seed. For convenience in handling, four or five rows of bunches should be closed together in winrows, each bunch being kept separate. A team can then readily pass between the rows, and a man on each side can lift the bunches and place them carefully on the wagon. When a few layers of bunches have been thus loaded they can be tramped down; the under layer will hold al the seed thus shattered. Cutting with mower, raking into winrows, parting into branches for loading, is attended at each step with loss from shattering. If the weather is wet, the under heads sprout and are spoiled. This system of managing will not be rewarded by large yields of seed or profitable results. Another prevalent mistake is late harvesting of clover hay; hence, late seed crop and usually poor fill of seed. It is often difficult to secure a huller for these late crops, as the earlier usually have the hullers engaged. Often these late crops are entirely lost with wet weather, difficulty in obtaining huller, poor fill of seed, and general bad management. The failure is complete. Then the "unlucky" farmer concludes there is no pay in clover seed, and the big yields reported in the papers are all a myth. Two years ago one-fourth of all the seed cut in this (Montgomery) county was thus lost. Last fall considerable loss was again sustained. A neighbor, from twenty acres that promised in the spring better results than my own land, turned less than one bushel per acre, while I received four and one-half bushels per acre. This difference was due to the bad management of the twenty-acre field. Hundreds of acres are thus badly managed every year, and followed by unprofitable results. A week or ten days of favorable weather and the seed will be in good condition to hull. It will require ten days or two weeks of dry weather to cure sufficiently to risk or stow under shed. The straw should be thoroughly dry when bulked, or it will become tough and require very dry or freezing weather to put it in proper condition to hull. I prefer hulling from the field, to avoid the danger of having damp clover in the rick, for it is impossible to hull damp clover or to dry it when in bulk, unless hulling is delayed until freezing weather. If the clover is put in bulk under cover or hulled before rain, the straw and chaff will make good feed.

Trouble with Spring Wheat in Canada.

It seems that the Canadians in Ontario are having trouble with their spring wheat, the same as we. The crop of Fife, which used to be the mainstay, has gradually lessened in quantity and quality, until now it has fallen to almost nothing. A correspondent from that section in a letter to the Country Gentleman, in endeavoring to find out the cause, says:

Some condemn the varieties. Others say that the climate has so changed as to render the growing of spring wheat an impossibility, while a few of the more thoughtful seem to think that our soil is deficient in alkali. To one who is thoroughly conversant with the different varieties, soil and climates adapted to the successful cultivation of this important crop, it is not very difficult to decide which is correct. Ten or fifteen years ago spring wheat reigned supreme, and the noble Scotch Fife was about the only variety grown or thought of. Forty bushels per acre was frequently recorded, and thirty to thirty-five bushels was the average yield. The entire wheat crop of Ontario at that time consisted of about 60 per cent of spring wheat, while at present the proportion of spring to fall wheat is about as 1 to 50, or 2 per cent spring wheat. If it is caused by a deficiency in the soil, how can forty-four bushels per acre be grown of a certain variety? Or how could thirty to forty bushels of Fyfe be produced ten years ago? Did some special blessing fall on this crop at that time? Such could never be. Therefore it is not the fault of the soil that we cannot grow spring wheat profitably, and it must be the varieties or some climatic influences. If the latter, why would not every variety be affected alike? Or how will one kind yield forty-four bushels per acre while others will not pay for the harvesting? Certainly it cannot be climate that is to blame. If it is not the varieties, I do not know what that is. But I know that some kinds are better than others, and one especially, which yielded this season forty-four bushels per acre. The variety is called the Peerless spring wheat. The above yield was obtained by a gentleman who sowed one bushel on an acre of light soil. Surely this is sufficient evidence that neither soil or climate is to blame for our failure. The grain of the Peerless is fully twice as large as ordinary wheat, of amber color and excellent milling quality. The straw is the strongest of any wheat I have ever seen, the heads contain from 40 to 63 grains each, with jet black chaff. Reports before me mention 7 pounds grown from one head, another has 15 pounds from 3 heads and 95 heads from one grain. It is to be hoped that the Peerless spring wheat will be generally introduced the coming spring, and I think it will.

We think from what the writer has said that it is evident that the Fife wheat of Eastern Canada needs changing. Fifteen years ago the fife wheat of Minnesota was good for twenty-five bushels to the acre; now it can be counted on for not half that amount, taking the State over. From the fact that new kinds do well for a time, as, for instance, the Peerless in Canada, named in the article above, it is evident that the cause lies in degenerated seed. This is now generally acknowledged to be the trouble here. The farmers of Eastern Canada should take some steps toward restoring their run-out Fife.

Tile Drains Near the Surface.

Is it safe to lay tile drains near the surface where they are liable to freeze? A correspondent of the Country Gentleman tells how he fixes them:

For example, to drain one basin on my farm, of only about one-quarter acre in extent, it required a drain of sixty rods long, and a cut part of the way five feet deep, and then, where the tiles passed through the center of the basin, they were only fourteen inches below the service of the ground. Where the drain was so near the surface, hard-burned four-inch tiles were used, and laid in a groove of solid clay. The rest of the drain was laid with three-inch pipes. This drain has been working well for years, and has more than paid for itself, but it would have been utterly impracticable to have laid it two feet deeper, on account of the increased cost, and, in this particular case, it could not have been done, as there was not sufficient fall. I have a number of other drains with equally shallow spots in them, and all work well, but they are laid, wherever they come nearer the surface than two and a half feet, with glazed tiles, or very hard-burned ones.

Your correspondent also speaks of water running through the drains all the time. As he may have trouble from roots getting into the tiles, I will give him a little of my experience in that line: We have some drains that carry spring water, and are seldom dry. Last May one of these began to show signs of stopping up. The field that it was in had a crop of wheat on it. By the middle of June a stream of water, only about the size of my finger, got through the three-inch tiles, when, after a shower, they ought to run full. I dug down in four places, and found the tiles full of wheat roots, and pulled out strings four feet long. It seemed as though the drain would have to be taken up and relaid, perhaps with socket tiles and cemented joints, to make a success of it.

But after the wheat was cut, more water began to find its way through the drain, and soon the roots rotted and the sediment washed out. At any rate, the tile now runs a full stream. The drain has not been stopped so far by timothy, clover and potato roots: at least, not enough to be noticeable.

A Frenchman's Mistake.

Knox's London Life: A Frenchman traveling by railway in England was very anxious to change his shirt in order to make a visit after the train had arrived at its destination, without taking the trouble to go to a hotel. His guide book indicated a tunnel on the road, and he asked the guard how long the train would be in the tunnel. The guard mistook his question, and supposing he asked how long before the train would reach the tunnel, answered briefly, "Half an hour." The carriage in which the Frenchman was traveling contained several ladies and gentlemen. The traveler got down his valise, unlocked it, and made everything ready for a change of apparel while they were in the tunnel. As soon as they entered it he pulled off his shirt and prepared to put on a clean one, but imagine his surprise on discovering that the train remained only three minutes in the tunnel instead of thirty! As they came out into open daylight he was standing in their midst in a condition quite unfit for a mixed company of ladies and gentlemen.

A letter from St. Paul conveys the gratifying information that plans and specifications, have been made for a new mill to be erected here, to be in running order by September next. The contract entered into and signed, calls for a roller mill of one hundred barrels capacity. The spot selected is on the east side of the railroad near the ground chosen for the new depot, where a new elevator company, recently formed, will put up a large elevator adjacent to the mill, both to be run by the same power.

Fisher township has decided on a plan of improvements destined to make it the model town of the county. It has some thirty miles of graded roads, and during this season proposes to grade and ditch thirty miles more. When there is a high and dry road with ditches completed around each of the thirty-six square miles comprising the town, then a row of shade trees will be set out on each side of the seventy-five miles of highway, making of it a grand park, equalling in healthfulness and picturesque beauty any domain of like extent on God's fair footstool.

On Saturday last, March 3d, Edward Howard, late chief miller in the Red Lake Flouring Mills, was instantly killed by a falling limb when cutting timber for McKnight's saw mill. After the destruction of the flouring mill, Mr Howard sought employment with McKnight, and was sent into the timber accompanied by his twin boys aged twelve years, to do such work as he could. He was cautioned of the danger of felling the large heavy timber of this section, and his want of experience in this kind of work; but, being anxious for labor, he took the contract and had cut but one tree when the accident occurred. It seems that the falling tree struck another one, and that the lads saw the fatal limb break away and jumped for life, but the father only had time to look up and received the full weight on his head. After the accident one of the sons placed the bleeding head of the father on his lap while the other ran for aid. But there was no earthly aid for this kind husband and affectionate father, his work had ended. Deceased was born in Bristol, England and was fifty-four years of age; he has been in the States about thirty-three years; married in Rock County, Wisconsin, and leaves a wife and seven children He has brothers living in La Crosse, Wis., and his wife's brother, James Fay, of California, was visiting him at the time of his death.

The remains were buried from the Presbyterian church on Wednesday, after a discourse by the Rev. Cathcart, of heart-felt sympathy and cheering consolation.

WE ACKNOWLEDGE THE CORN.

Major Hall has the Floor, and the Editor is Floored.

CROMWELL, Clay Co., Feb. 27, 1883.

To the Editor of the News.

You need to be converted. According to a published interview with you, in a Minneapolis paper last year, your faith in raising corn in this section of country is not very strong. To convert you and take away every doubt from your mind, and to fully convince you that we can not only raise good corn here, but that raising corn is more profitable than raising wheat, I enclose herewith a deadhead ticket, which will admit you once a month, for the coming season, to Hope farm, to watch the planting, cultivating and maturing of 15 or 20 acres of corn on sod, and to eat a bowl of mush (and milk) made from meal ground from good sound bright corn, raised on sod in 1882. That corn is a sure and profitable crop here on sod, I have not the least doubt. For four years in succession I have raised good sound corn on sod, so that it fully matured before frost. Last year, which—according to report—was the poorest corn year for 25 years past, I raised 560 bushels of good sound corn on 9½ acres of sod, that was matured and cut up before frost. My neighbor, Judge Perkins, raised about 600 bushels of nice sound corn on old land, and John Cameron raised a good crop also, on old land. Marion France, likewise, 5 acres on old land, that yielded well.

My corn-stalks were worth more to me, for fodder, than the cost of seed, planting, cultivating and harvesting. The stalks have saved me 15 tons of hay at least. My five head of cattle had nothing but corn stalks for six week, and my four horses and two colts have eaten stalks and not a mouthful of hay since the 1st of October last, and I have stalks enough to keep them until the middle of March. You will see that my 560 bushels of corn really cost me nothing, and I could have sold it at least for 50c per bushel, which would amount to $280, profit on 9½ acres. Remember this was on sod, which usually produces nothing the first year. Hence I maintain that 15 or 20 acres of corn properly put in and worked on sod, is worth more money to any farmer in this country, than the same number of acres of old land in wheat at 20 bushels per acre, and at one dollar a bushel. After five years of experimenting I am ready to assert, and can maintain it too, that corn on sod is a sure crop in this country, and more profitable to the farmer than all wheat. I plow the corn under, and each day work down what has been put in, with the Chicago pulverizer, I drag it with a smoothing harrow just as it is coming up, and drag it over once or twice after it is up, and then cultivate it three or four times during the summer. To chop corn in on sod and then leave it to take care of itself (in my opinion) is labor thrown away, or labor that does not pay. Last year I commenced plowing corn under on sod, May 25th, and finished June 4th, working only 6½ days at it in the mean time, with one man to drop the corn.

COMBINATION BUGGY GEAR. WITH LONGITUDINAL SPRING.

The Combination Buggy, (cash price at factory, $100,) of which the above cut represents the Gear, has become known as the very best for easy riding and durable qualities. Years of most trying use, in private and livery, has abundantly proved this fact. These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the torsional strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds to the elasticity of the springs producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—steel tires and axles, trimmings of never fading cloth or fancy leather.

Peterson's Magazine for April is already on our table, as welcome as the flowers of Spring, and quite as fresh and beautiful. The embellishments, as usual are very fine, particularly the steel-plate "A Modern Cinderella;" the colored steel fashion-plate; and the colored pattern in crewels, a bunch of dog-daisies. But the specialty of the number is its stories, which, though always superior in "Peterson," are better this month than ever. Mr. Benedict's novelet, "A Professional Beauty," is alone worth the subscription price Then there is one of "Josiah Allen's Wife's" humorous sketches. "In Kittery" by the author of "The Second Life," is also such as one rarely reads. The illustrated story, "My First Ball-Dress," is charmingly told; and so is the romantic "Modern Cinderella." All the Spring fashions are given in advance and the fashion cuts, work-table cuts etc., etc., are without number. No lady should be without this magazine. It is not too late to subscribe for 1883, as all the back numbers can be supplied, if desired. The price is but two dollars, and to clubs it is much cheaper. Specimens are sent, gratis, to those wishing to get up clubs, and handsome premiums are given for getting them up. Subscribe at once. Address Chas. J. Carman Carvings

Carman Courier.

Yesterday evening Messrs. Daniel and Thomas McCleary and Pat. O'Connell returned from the pineries of Wisconsin where they have been engaged in lumbering during the past winter, and bringing with them a carload of horses. They are all Carman boys and we are pleased to welcome them back to our midst once again.

We are pained to chronicle in these columns the demise of two bright and interesting little children of Mr. G. M. Fisk from an attack of capillary bronchitis that terminated fatally on Saturday of last week. They were twins aged fifteen months and ten days, and were named Herbie and Bertie respectively. Rev. F. K. Roberts was called upon to perform the last sad rites on Tuesday that was listened to by a number of sympathizing friends from here. They have the sympathy of all who know them in this the severing of those ties which loving parents feel so keenly, but they will act as bright and guiding stars to guide them on through the lonely pathway of life and serve as silken threads that may be strengthened by a happy re-union hereafter.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Several crows have been seen in this vicinity the past week. This is one of the signs of spring.

Will Sorsoliel accidently got some salt in his eye last week; he also cut a gash in his leg with an ax and is now going around looking as if he had come out second best in a prize fight.

Dan Patterson is having a well dug near his livery stable Hard pan has been reached at a depth of 25 feet; but as no good water has been found he will drill the remainder.

Several loads of merchandise have arrived within the past week from Geo Crocker's store at Crookston. Mr. C. intends shipping all his stock up here and will be up himself in a couple of weeks to build a residence when he will move his family up and enroll himself as an inhabitant of the "New Chicago."

Mr. Ole Bergland, of the firm of Juve & Bergland, general merchandise, of Crookston, spent a few days with us last week Mr. B. expressed much surprise at our rapid growth. He was up here last summer when there was but one or two buildings in the place, now he finds one of the most flourishing towns in the valley, and one whose prosperity has only commenced.

Mr. C. C. Utzinger one of Crookston's most popular merchants is in town. Mr U. has disposed of his drug store and is looking up a location to go into business in this place He has already purchased the lots and will, probably be ready to start in the course of a couple of weeks

Mr E. A. Ranson and C. A Seabury, proprietors of the new drug store are in town, superintending the erection of their store. They intend rushing their building right on to completion and expect to be in running order by the first of April. They are both enterprising young men and good druggists, and there is no question but what they will do a good business.

One day last week Chas. Swenson and Charlie Rapp started for Crookston, They stopped at Jones' on the Sand Ridge for dinner, after which Mr. Swenson went out and hitched up the team, and leaving them standing on the road started in after his overcoat. But the moment his back was turned the team started on a run toward Crookston Mr. S. gave chase and overtook them about two miles distant, stuck in the snow. After getting them onto the road he drove to Boushane's and putting his horses in the barn, awaited the appearance of his companion. But as it was growing late, and very stormy he concluded to remain all night. At 10 o'clock the next morning as Charlie had not put in an appearance Mr. Swenson, thinking that he had returned to St. Hilaire, drove on to Crookston. Imagine his surprise upon arriving there to find Charlie safe and sound. He had started on behind but not knowing that Swenson was waiting for him at Boushanes, had walked in to Crookston, a distance of 18 miles, carried two big buffalo overcoats and faced the whole distance one of the worst storms we have had this winter. He arrived in Crookston about 7 o'clock in the evening and, it is needless to say was about tired out.

Red Lake Falls Doings.

From the Messenger.

Vacation will commence in our Union school on the 30th inst.

The attendance in our Sunday school is increasing every Sunday. [illegible]

C. Kretzschmar has purchased W. A. Schreiter's claim of 160 acres.

School district No. 88 in the township of Red Lake Falls, is to have a new school house. The material has been delivered for the same.

We understand that Mr. Schneider, a former restaurant keeper at Crookston, arrived here with his mother and sister last week, and will at once erect a suitable building on Broadway and open a first-class restaurant

R. W. Ranney, of Glyndon, was in town Tuesday Mr. Ranney is a deep well contractor, and has done some very effectual work in this vicinity. The deep well at Ada was put down by him and is pronounced by all as a success.

Mr. M. H. Iltis, of Elizabethtown, Minn., was in our midst Friday and Saturday of last week. Mr. Iltis announced his intention of returning and going into busines with us here, and as he is an old hotel keeper he will undoubtedly build and conduct a first-class house in Red Lake Falls.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin,

Mr. Otis has teams engaged in hauling sand to the old mill site. It looks like rebuilding.

Scores of teams visit us daily from the north of town, and take out wood for summer fuel Teaming has been constant and profitable during the winter.

O. L. Hamery, the surveyor, was in town last Sunday and secured a contract for laying out an addition to the village of Fisher on the south side of the river.

Squire Webster is showered with honors. On election day he was made Assessor of his town and a grandfather by the birth of a son to his daughter, Mrs. J. Wilcox.

"The earthquake shocks," heard at intervals during the day, are caused by the explosion of dynamite for removal of dirt, where the bridge repairs are being prosecuted.

We learn that the Rockwood farm, in town of Keystone, has become the joint property of a body of Indianapolis gentlemen. The stockholders will drain and break up the entire land.

During the high winds of Wednesday, sparks from McKnight's saw mill ignited the straw adjacent to the Nesbit residence, and started an insipient conflagration. It was soon and put out in good time, but the mill shut down until the wind lulled.

Friday the residence of A. Malmberg, who lives on the south side of the river, about two miles from town, was entirely destroyed by fire, with all its contents Mr. Malmberg and wife were absent at the time, and the servants say the fire originated in the roof He had an insurance of $350 of his building.

Now that adequate laws have been secured for drainage, the next most important proceeding is to secure a correct topography of each town. Let competent surveyors say where the ground is low and where the water will best find an outlet. Otherwise all money expended for ditching may result in worse than waste. This expense need be but a small one, let it be performed at the earliest moment.

Dalton's fine brick block at East Grand Forks was destroyed by fire on Sunday morning. Town clerks of the several towns in the county will confer a favor on the Auditor's office, by making their election returns promptly. STEWERT & LAWRENCE, [47-49] Broadway, Crookston, Minn.

A. J. Clark of the Argyle Banner greeted us one day this week. A. J. is growing up with the country mightily. He is county attorney, postmaster and editor and has only been there a few months. At this rate how long will it take him to capture the whole county? Well, A. J. deserves good fortune and we are pleased to see that he is appreciated.

Everybody is earnestly requested to be in attendance at the meeting of the Agricultural Society at City Hall this evening; at least every man who feels interested in the welfare of our county should be there and subscribe for one share of the stock. The ground has been secured and all paid for except a few dollars, and it is to be hoped that those few dollars may be forthcoming. Don't forget to be there.

Mr. B. M. Hall arrived from Savona, Steuben Co., N. Y., on Monday. Mr. Hall has heard the fame of the Red River Valley and has come to see how it is himself and, if suited, will add one more to the growing list of voters and tax payers of our prosperous and happy county. We gladly welcome him to this new land and trust that he may see it for his best interests to cast in his lot with us.

Lee & Herrick have broken ground for their large 200 barrel roller mills and are busy at work on the foundation which they expect to have laid in two weeks. This great institution is now an assured fact and it will now do to crow over. Crookston may well rejoice in the prospect of becoming a manufacturing town of some importance as her two great flouring mills and her paper mills are now assured facts.

Frank Farnham, on behalf of the Paper Mill Company, has secured 14 lots for the Crookston Improvement Company, on Sampson's Addition. Mr. Farnham has gone below to make further arrangements for carrying out the plans of the company.

Boss Hinman expects to put a crew of men to work on the Presbyterian church building in a few days.

John O. Juve would not make a bad alderman. His business qualifications eminently fit him for the position.

N. P. Stone has been mentioned for Mayor. No better choice could be made and we believe he would get a majority of the votes.

The First Ward ought to be well represented in the coming Council. Every fellah in the ward is a candidate for alderman—except us.

Mike Jeffers is preparing to move to Red Lake Falls where he intends to boom real estate. Mike is a thoroughbred boomer.

The plans for the Congregational church have been received and the work of building will soon be commenced. The building will cost in the neighborhood of $4000.

A grand concert will be given at Ericsson's Hall, Wednesday evening, March 28th, by Prof. Dusso's singing class, assisted by Mr Chas. Mr. J. E. Mitton, formerly of the Crookston House, has assumed control of a fine hotel at Wahpeton, D. T., the Merchants Hotel, and is now ready to welcome his friends in right royal manner. We take pleasure in recommending J. E. to the Wahpetonians and all who have occasion to visit a first-class hotel as a No. 1, jolly mine host in every particular. If any of our readers ever have occasion to visit Breckenridge or Wahpeton they should not fail to give the Merchants Hotel a call if they desire to make their visit a success. J. E. is having a good trade and deserves it.

M. Filiatrault returned from a short visit to Duluth on Sunday. He says that Mr. A. O. Barlow, the gentleman in charge of the affairs of the D. & W. R. R. Co., informed him that the company are paying up all matters in full and that it is their intention to commence active operations all along the line as soon as spring opens and that the line will be completed at an early date. We sincerely hope this is true and shall begin to believe it when we see it done. Mr. F. says Duluth is booming this spring; new brick blocks going up, street cars to be put on the line early in April and the Iron Mountain road to be built at an early day.

The signs of the times indicate more building by two to one than during any season since the city of Crookston was in existence. Mr. Allen tells us of large contracts already made for brick buildings and many that are in contemplation. Two large roller flouring mills, a large paper mill and many tenement houses are sure and the demand for houses to rent that is every day increasing will necessitate the building of a great many before next fall. Among the business buildings contemplated, if one-half are built it will aggregate more building than ever before. We are to have a building boom of huge proportions.

The work of putting in the stone that Mr. Chase has been hauling all winter has commenced and will be pushed to an early completion. There will be between 3,000 and 4,000 tons of stone put where they will do the most good and those croakers who have prophesied the ruination of the dam by the spring freshets ought to go down and look the ground over before they tear off any more suspender buttons mourning over the ruin of the dam. The dam is so constructed that the great volume of water will roll over it without a chance to get a grip sufficient to uproot it and [illegible]

A LESSON IN ECONOMY.

Milly Barrington was only eighteen when she came to live at Holly Lodge. Very young to be married, said the gossips of the neighborhood; still younger to assume all the cares and responsibilities of the household. And there were not lacking divers doleful prophets, who declared, with eyes rolled up and mouths drawn down, that Mrs. Barrington never would "get on" with the old colonel.

"He is so fastidious," said one.

"So difficult to suit," said another.

"His ideal is so impossibly high!" declared a third.

But to their surprise—perhaps a little to their disappointment—Milly and her father-in-law were the best of freinds from the very first moment in which they looked upon each other's faces.

Milly was so anxious to learn, so eager to comprehend the ins and outs of thd great, roomy old farmhouse, so ambitious to excel every house keeper in the neighborhood, that the old gentleman said, with a smile, to his son:

"Don't let that little girl undertake too much, Dudley."

And Dudley Barrington answered, with a yawn:

"There is no danger of that, sir. The ladies of Holly Lodge have always been first-rate housekeepers, you know. And if a woman is at work, she isn't spending money foolishly, or gossipping."

Col. Barrington's keen blue eyes, regarded his son sharply, for a moment.

"Do you think Milly is addicted to either of those pernicious practices?" said he.

"They come natural to all women, don't they?" said Dudley, shrugging his shoulders.

"Not to all!" said the colonel.

And in his secret soul he wondered if Dudley was really worthy of such a jewel as Millicent, his wife.

So the weeks went on, and Milly stood bravely to the helm, until, one bright October day, the colonel, chancing to pass the low kitchen window, where the hop-vines made a screen of moving shadow, looked smilingly in to where his daughter-in-law was at work.

"Have you got a glass of cool milk for me, little girl?" said he.

Milly brought the milk promptly.

"See, papa," she said, triumphantly pointing to the table, "what a baking I have done to day! Three apple-pies, three loaves of bread, a pan of biscuit, a loaf of cup cake, and a dozen plum tarts!"

"Bravo!" said the colonel. "But, Milly why are you baking? Where is Hannah?"

"Hannah wanted her wages raised," said Milly, rather soberly. "And Dudley said it was all nonsense keeping a girl, when I was so fond of housework. So she has gone."

"But are you fond of housework?" asked the colonel. "In itself, as an abstract thing, I mean?"

"Yes papa," Milly answered with some hesitation. "But I am a little tired this morning. I rose early and swept the house through before breakfast, so as to have time for the baking."

"You are a good little girl," said the father-in-law. "But we mustn't let you work too hard."

"Papa," said Milly, with downcast lashes, and a deep pink shadow creeping over her cheek, "I've been thinking for some time that—that—"

"Well," said the colonel, encouragingly.

"That I should like to ask you for a little money," faltered Milly.

"Money!" echoed Colonel Barrington, in surprise. "Doesn't Dudley give you all you want?"

Once more Milly hesitated.

"He wants to know what everything is for," said she. "He thinks fifty cents is too much for ribbon, and he says bonnet frames ought to be had cheaper than a quarter of a dollar, and he declares its all nonsense to buy silk gloves when cotton will do as well. And I do need another plume for my hat since the rain spoiled the canary-colored one, but I don't like to ask him for it."

"Do you mean to say," said Col. Barrington, leaning his elbows on the sill—"that you don't have a regular allowance every week?"

"No, papa!" said Milly, lifting her prettily-arched brows! "Dudley says says women don't know how to use money, and that a wife should always receive every cent she spends from the husband. And— I tell you, papa, because you are always so kind to me——I am so ashamed to have him think me extravagant, and I do really need so many little things that men haven't any idea of. It's a little hard, sometimes."

Colonel Barrington took a goodly roll of bills out of his pocket and laid them on the window-sill.

"Here, little girl," he said; "you have earned them a dozen times over!"

Milly reached up to kiss him through the vine-leaves.

"Oh, papa, you are such a darling!" she said.

He only patted her cheek in reply.

"Dudley don't know what a treasure he has got," he pondered, as he kept on his walk up to the front verandah, where a great maple-tree was showing its yellow trophies over the steps, and the balmy sunshine slept on the painted floor. "He is making a Circassian slave out of that dear little woman."

And the colonel took his book, and stretched himself comfortably out in the hammock for his evening's reveries.

It was the next day that his son came to him, in the library, where a little fire of logs had been kindled, for a chill northeast rain had blown all the yellow maple-leaves away, and the sun was obscured in drifting clouds.

"Well, my boy," said the colonel, kindly, "You are off for the city, I suppose?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Barrington, junior, a tall, straight, handsome young man, with a brown complexion, and dark, sparkling eyes. "And before I go, perhaps you had better give me a cheque on the bank, if it's quite convenient."

"A cheque!" said the colonel. "For what?"

"I'm about out of ready cash," said Dudley, carelessly; "and a little spending money would come very handy for current expenses."

"Oh!" observed the colonel. "And what are you going to buy?"

Dudley looked at his father in amazement.

"I need a fall suit, sir," said he, "and—"

"Yes, yes!" nodded the old gentleman. "And how much do you pay for a fall suit now?"

"Oh, thirty-five or forty dollors!" answered Dudley.

"Thirty-five or, forty dollars!" echoed Colonel Barrington. "Isn't that rather vague?"

"A fellow never knows exactly—" explained Dudley.

"Ah, but you ought to know!" interrupted the old gentleman. "And now I am on the subject, you buy your clothes of Lanier, don't you? And aren't there cheaper places?"

"And," added Dudley, "I've a little bill at the cigar store to settle, and there are some new books I should like to read; and—"

"Just send in the bills to me," said Colonel Barrington, gravely. "Young men have so many fictitious wants, nowadays! But, as I said before, let all the bills be sent to me. And as for spending-money, here is enough for the present."

He drew out a bank-note, and handed it to his son. Dudley stared at it in amazement. It was a half dollar bill.

"I expected a check, sir," said he, somewhat discomfited.

"Did you?" said Colonel Barrington.

"It isn't agreeable to be put on such an allowance!" went on Dudley, sharply. "I'm not accustomed to it, and—"

"Not agreeable, eh?" said the colonel comfortably adjusting his feet on an embroidered rest. "Then, why do you practice the system with your wife?"

"I give her all that she needs to spend," said Dudley, coloring up.

"And I have given you all that you need," assorted Colonel Barrington.

"I am a man!" said Dudley.

"And she is a woman!" retorted the colonel.

"I am the manager of your downtown warehouse, and I claim my honest remuneration as such," cried Dudley. "I am no beggar. There is no cent which I ask that I do not earn."

"That is Millicent's case exactly," said the wise old advocate. "She does the work of the house and does it well. She is an economist in every sense of the word. Is it right that she should receive merely her board and clothes? Is she not entitled to a regular allowance to spend as she pleases? Do not think me a meddlesome old fogy, my son," Colonel Barrington added, raising and placing his hand kindly on his son's shoulder. "But I have been observing all these things, and merely wanted to give you a personal application of this lesson in political economy; You see how it humiliates one to have to beg humbly for the money that one has honestly earned—to be called upon for an account of every penny one wishes to spend Don't put your wife into such a position as this. Treat her as one of the firm of Barrington & Co."

Dudley Barrington stood still a moment, pondering; and then he said earnestly:

"I will, sir! You are right!"

And Milly was delighted, that very day, to receive a check for an ample sum of money from her husband.

"It's all for me?" she cried, with glittering eyes.

"Yes, all," Dudley answered, laughing.

"But what am I to do with so much money?"

"Lock it up in your desk, dear," he answered, "and spend it for your needs as they occur."

"But I never had so much before all at one time!" exclaimed the amazed Milly.

"No you never had, more shame to me," acknowledged Dudley Barrington, "But I have come to the conclusion, that you are no child to be given a few cents at a time. You are my little housekeeper, and deserve your regular salary. I shall give you this check of fifty dollars for your own personal expenses, at the beginning of every month and you shall use and economize it as you choose. The household expenses will be paid out of the common stock."

Milly clapped he hands joyously.

"Oh, Dudley, I never felt so rich in my life!" said she. "Now I can dress like other women, and give a little money to the church, and help the poor, and feel independent and I can lay up a little, too, Dudley, every month? Oh, you shall see see what an exellent manager I can be!"

Dudley Barrington looked at his young wife with a sharp prick of conscience at his heart. Why had he never made her so innocently happy before? Simply because it had never occurred to him.

And Milly ran eagerly to her father-in-law.

"Papa!" she cried," I am to have fifty dollars a month, all for my own, and never give an account of a cent of it, unless I please! It is Dudley's own offer. Isn't he kind?"

And Colonel Barrington smiled and patted her head, and answered gravely: "Very kind, indeed!"—Hellen Forrest Graves.

A lady writes: "Overwork, care, anxiety, grief, sorrow, unkindness, etc., made quite an invalid of me. I suffered great fatigue and was very nervous. Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla has made me strong and happy. It has made me more able to endure hardships."

Washing Each Other's Feet.

"You never saw a foot-washing?" said Rev. Joseph Bowen. "Then you could not have traveled much in the back woods sections of the South and West Sermons supposably delivered by foot-washing divines were widely published and widely read. I recollect one of the most famous of them all—which appeared first, I believe, in the New Orleans Picayune along the fifties. It was attributed to the "Flat-boat preacher," an itinerant who traveled down the river in a flat boat, preaching at the landings. If you have seen it you will recognize it by the text, ostensibly a quotation from the Scriptures—"And they shall gnaw a file and flee unto the mountains of Hepsidam, where the lion roareth and the whangdoodle mourneth for its first-born." Nonsensical as was the whole sermon, it was made a lasting impression and there are a great many people to-day who see references to the Mountains of Hepsidam without knowing their relevancy. But you want to know if I ever saw foot-washing. Well, yes, I have one. I might have seen more had I been so inclined, but that satisfied my curiosity. I was at Randolph, Tenn., in June, 1887. I was slightly acquainted with the country, and, happening to step in at Randolph over Sunday, I learned that there was a meeting at Salem Church, six miles away. I borrowed a horse and rode to the place. The church, built of logs, with the cracks 'daubed,' set back about 100 yards from the road in the middle of a grove. During the week it was used as a school-house, but now there was a bustling scene around it. The day was an important one, for a 'powerful exhorter' was on hand: there were to be the sacrament and foot-washing in the morning and foot-washing again in the afternoon. It was just before 10 o'clock in the morning, and the congregation was gathering in all sorts of conveyances. The grove was full of farm wagons; saddle horses and saddle mules were hung to the limbs and tied to the stake-and-rider fence at the side of the church. The minister had well earned his reputaiion of being a 'powerful exhortor,' as I found when he commenced his sermon. He was an uneducated man, and these was nothing in the words he uttered which might not naturally have been expected. His strong points was not in what he said, but in how he said it. As he warmed to his work he walked rapidly from side to side of the pulpit, stopping occasionally as in a thundering voice he warned his unconverted hearers that they were 'hanging over hell-fire by a single hair, to deal resounding blows to the Bible with his fist by way of emphasis. When he concluded he took a long crash towel and girded it around his waist. At the side of the pulpit was a bucket of water and a "noggin." If you don't happen to know what a noggin is I may explain that it is a small tub a size larger than a piggin. This one had been constructed by sawing a whisky-keg in half. When the preacher commenced pouring the water into it, an old gentleman in the amen corner commenced pulling off his brogans and rolling up the bottoms of his trousers.

"'Will some brother raise a hymn?' asked the minister, and the brother who now has his shoes off and was engaged with his home-knit cotton socks raised one. 'I am a soldier of the cross,' and as the congregation joined he put both feet in the noggin which had been set before him. The preacher squatted down in front of him rubbed his hands around over the feet and up and down his shins half-way to the knee. When the brother thought they were washed enough, he held them up out of the water, and the parson wiped them on the crash towel. Then the parson sat down, and having pulled off his shoes had his feet washed by the brother to whom he had just ministered. All who wished to join in the ceremony had taken possession of the front seats—the mourners' benches. Among those who had gone up had been a portly sister by whom I sat. The noggin came to her next and she washed the feet of her sister next to her, having her own washed in turn. When all the feet on the front seat had been bathed, the water in the noggin was emptied out of the back door and a fresh supply brought in from the well near the church. The noggin passed around from brother to brother, and from sister to sister for an hour, and in that time I saw more varieties of feet than I have ever seen before or since."—St. Louis Republican.

St Paul Boy Lynched in Montana.

The particulars of the atrocious murder and cremation of Lavison, near Glendale, Mont., Feb. 4, the subsequent arrest of John A. Jessrang, the unsuccessful attempt of the citizens of Beaverhead county to extort a confession from him by hanging him five times, the amputation of his feet, and appearance in coart and the continuance of his case till the next term are all well understood by the public, all the particulars having been published in the papers.

It appears by later advices that on Tuesday night a body of determined men, armed and masked, entered the front room of the jail, overpowered the jailor and secured the keys. Entering Jessrang's cell they shackled his hands behind him, placed one end of the rope around his neck, and the other over the upper bar of the iron railing and then with a united pull jerked him out of bed into the next world. While being dragged across the floor his pants came off more plainly exposing his bandaged and bleeding feet. The dim flicker of a solitary lamp lent a ghastly aspect to the scene. Jessrang showed wonderful nerve, not a complaint or murmur of pain escaping his pallid lips. He was buried yesterday, about half a dozen citizens following his remains to the grave. Thus ends the last chapter of a bloody record. There can be little doubt that Jessrang was guilty ot the crime with which he was charged. He may have richly deserved death, but it would have been better if he had met his end by the civilized and legal process. Jessrang was said to be well connected in the East, but being naturally wild and dissipated, the restraining influences of home had no effect on him, and he pursued a course which frequently got him into trouble. Young Jessrang's father is the well known jailor of the St. Paul workhouse and formerly of the city lock-up.

A Potential Distributor of Patronage.

There was an outgoing senator who is an exception to the rules of patronage—William Pitt Kellogg of Louisiana; but he only steps from the senate to the house, and, in either body, he is the sole republican representative from that state, and is regarded by the administration as the republican party of Louisiana. The duties of the republican party in Louisiana, even in the disposition of patronage, are quite onerous, when concentrated in one man, and William Pitt Kellogg, although he missed few votes in the closing month of the session, was the busiest man in Washington. Mr Kellogg, during the last thirty days, has filled 340 offices in Lousiana. It happened that the vacancies for nearly all the federal offices occurred at this time and Mr. Kellogg has had the disposal of them or four years to come, reaching two years into the next administration, be it republican or democratic. He is the most potential distributor of patronage next to the president of the United States.—Washington Letter.

The Pillsbury A and several other large mills at Minneapolis, have been shut down, owing to the light receipts and high price of milling wheat, while there is no corresponding increase in the flour quotations. The mills now in actual operation represents a daily capacity of only 9,135 barrels of flour, out of 25 253 for all the mills at the falls. This is the smallest output since last fall, before the new crop began to move.

Sword and Pen in Their Proper Sphere.

Gen. Sherman a few days ago wrote as follows to an autograph collector in Brooklyn, who had asked for a few lines on the sentiment "The pen is mightier than the sword": Lord Lytton would never have put the signature to so naked a sentiment. Surely I will not. In the text was a prefix of qualification:

> "Beneath the rule of men entirely great,
> The pen is mightier than the sword."

"Now, this world does not often present the condition of facts herein described. Men entirely great are very rare indeed, and even Washington, who approached greatness as near as any mortal, found good use for the sword and the pen, each in its proper sphere. You and I have seen the day when a great and good man ruled this country (Lincoln), who wielded a powerful and prolific pen, and yet had to call to his assistance a million of flaming swords. I cannot subscribe to your sentiment, because it is not true. Rather, in the providence of God, there is a time when the sword may cut the Gordian knot and set free the principles of right and justice bound up in the meshes of hatred, revenge and tyranny that the pen of mighty men like Clay, Webster, Crittenden and Lincoln were unable to disentangle."

SIGNIFICANT SPRING.

A Dissertation Upon Its Advent, and Its Effect Upon Mankind.

"The green leaf of the new-come Spring."—Shak.

Everybody recognizes spring, when it is once upon us, but many persons are not familiar with the exact date of its appearance. Webster, the world-renowned lexicographer, gives us a definition which may not be inappropriate here. "Spring," says he, "is the season of the year when plants begin to vegetate and rise: the vernal season, comprehending the months of March, April and May, in the middle latitudes north of the equator."

Thomson, in his "Seasons," and Shakspeare in many of his works, have, perhaps, no peers in describing it, and yet "ethereal spring" is freighted with malaria, "that insidious foe, lurking unseen in the very air we breathe." It spreads over the fairest portions of our land; brings death and disease to thousands; cuts off scores upon scores of our children and youth, as well as those in advanced life. A pestilence is regarded with little less apprehension, and people everywhere are asking, "What is it?" "Where does it come from?" "What will cure it?"

KIDNEY-WORT, AS A SPRING MEDICINE.

When you begin to lose appetite:—have a headache, a pain in your side, back, and shoulders;—to toss about at night in restless dreams;—wake in the morning with a foul mouth and furred tongue;—feel disinclined to go about your work, heavy in body and oppressed in mind;—have a fit of the blues;—when your urine gets scanty or high-colored;—to suffer with constipation, diarrhœa, or indigestion;—have a pasty, sallow face, dull eyes, and a blotched skin;—one or all of these common complaints will certainly be evidences that your liver is disordered, torpid, or perhaps diseased. A bottle of Kidney-Wort is, under such circumstances, a priceless boon to such a person.

Bare assertions of proprietors have come to possess less force than they frequently merit. The cause of this condition of popular skepticism is, in the main, to be found in the fact that charlatanism covers our broad land. Meritorious articles are too frequently found in bad company.

The proprietors of Kidney-Wort always prove all their assertions, touching the merits of their preparations. When we affirm, therefore, that Kidney-Wort is a specific for just such disorders as have been mentioned in this article, the proof, too, belongs to and shall follow this statement.

A PHYSICIAN'S EXPERIENCE.

Dr. R. K. Clark, a regular physician of extensive practice in Grand Isle county, and a worthy deacon of the Congregational Church, at South Hero, Vt., has used Kidney-Wort for several years in his practice, and before the present proprietors purchased an interest in it, he had given his unbiased opinion in its favor. This opinion has not changed. "It has done better than any other remedy I have ever used," says the Doctor, and, further on, he writes: "I do not recollect an instance where the patient to whom I have given it has failed to receive benefit from its use, and in some severe cases most decidedly so." These are strong words. They are from a representative, conscientious, ever-approachable public citizen, however, and—better still—they are true.

Kidney-Wort will bear all the encomiums lavished upon it by its friends—and their name is legion. "I will swear by Kidney-Wort all the time," writes Mr. J. R. Kauffman, of Lancaster, Pa. We will supplement this by asserting, as a matter of fact, and one capable of demonstration, that all honest patrons of this remedy are its friends and advocates.

An Extraordinary Case.

AUSTIN, Texas, Feb. 20th, 1880.

To Mr. J. W. Graham, Druggist:

Dear Sir—My case was an acute form of bronchitis, and was of one and a half year's duration. I employed the best medical aid possible, but failed rapidly, until the doctors said I would die—that my case was incurable. Thrown upon my own resources, I got a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the lungs, and in six hours felt a decided relief. In three days the cough almost disappeared. Now that my chances of life are good for many years, I earnestly recommend the above to every sufferer of lung or throat disease.

C. B. LATHROP.

"I Am the Last of Six."

One rainy forenoon, something less than a year ago, a pale, cadaverous youth walked into the store of C. N. Crittendon, New York, and in weak, husky tones, interrupted frequently by a dry, hacking cough, stated that he wanted a couple of bottles of Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar." "I am the last of six," he said; "the others all died of consumption, and I am going fast." He took in all twelve bottles, and is to-day in perfect health—lungs sound, cough gone, not a sound of pulmonary disease remaining. Sold by druggists.

Opinion of eminent Dr. R. S. Steuart, President of Maryland Hospital, Baltimore: "I have used Golden's Liquid Beef and Tonic for more than one year, and I recommend it as one of the most efficient preparations I have ever met with. It combines the virtues of food and tonic in a remarkable way, and I am satisfied has saved life when no other medicine could do so." Of druggists generally.

Farewell to Power and Place.

"The air was filled with farewells" last week, society busy with its "P. P. C." and Congress nearing dissolution, when many statesmen will say "Vale! vale! longum vale!" to power and place. The ladies, with charming candor, speak with regret at leaving the gaiety and variety of the amusements, the genial climate, unbounded hospitality, the dash and excitement of a crowded city. It is so hard to leave all these attractions and go back to the humdrum existence of some dull country town. The fact that my lady will be of more consequence to her friends and neighbors, that she will be pointed out and studied by others as having lived in Washington for so and so long a time, will be some consolation to her woman's pride. But, alas! to be permitted to wear the purples for so brief a space, and then to have to lay them away from sight is indeed a hard and cruel fate. Her lord, however, is made of sterner stuff. If he speaks truthfully, he is so glad to quit the whole comedy with a farce at both beginning and end. He has so neglected his own affairs for the public weal; he is so weary of it all; he has been worked like a pack horse and needs rest, and nothing could tempt him into public life again—nothing?—unless it be the imperative demand of his fellow-citizens. Then he might yield reluctantly, however, to that high sense of duty which calls all patriotic men to sacrifice self for their country's sake. Should the public be curious to learn further of this unselfish servant of the people, after adjournment he may be seen dodging in and out of the State Department where he is tunneling for a place in that bureau of defunct statesmen, known as a foreign mission. But all are not of such Spartan mold. There are those who mourn and will not be comforted. The world of fashion ceased to exist as an incorporated body of visitors or receivers of visitors on Saturday.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.

[From the Boston Globe.]

Messrs. Editors:—

The above is a good likeness of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., who above all other human beings may be truthfully called the "Dear Friend of Woman," as some of her correspondents love to call her. She is zealously devoted to her work, which is the outcome of a life-study, and is obliged to keep six lady assistants, to help her answer the large correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its special burden of suffering, or joy at release from it. Her Vegetable Compound is a medicine for good and not evil purposes. I have personally investigated it and am satisfied of the truth of this.

On account of its proven merits, it is recommended and prescribed by the best physicians in the country. One says: "It works like a charm and saves much pain. It will cure entirely the worst form of falling of the uterus, Leucorrhœa, irregular and painful Menstruation, all Ovarian Troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Floodings, all Displacements and the consequent spinal weakness, and is especially adapted to the Change of Life."

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the law that governs the female system.

It costs only $1. per bottle or six for $5., and is sold by druggists. Any advice required as to special cases, and the names of many who have been restored to perfect health by the use of the Vegetable Compound, can be obtained by addressing Mrs. P., with stamp for reply, at her home in Lynn, Mass.

For Kidney Complaint of either sex this compound is unsurpassed as abundant testimonials show.

"Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills," says one writer, "are the best in the world for the cure of Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the liver. Her Blood Purifier works wonders in its special line and bids fair to equal the Compound in its popularity.

All must respect her as an Angel of Mercy whose sole ambition is to do good to others.

JEALOUSY.

They stood upon the wide veranda, and
Before he left her side I saw him turn
And take for her, from out the vine-hung urn,
A crimson rose, and with a deferent hand
He placed it in the soft hair's silky strand,
Then in my soul did a fierce longing burn,
And a new madness, swift, and keen, and stern,
Arose and held me in its strong command.

And then—O blessed then!—I saw her take
A white rose from the white breast where it slept,
And, with a proud but timid courage, lift
It to her lips. For joy I could have wept—
For joy hath tears. The white rose was my gift!

THE CITY OF EARTHQUAKES

The Thrilling Experience of an American Traveler in Venezuela.

Caracas has got used to earthquakes, as Mexico to revolutions. Their frequency has developed a special nomenclature. Terremoto, the literal translation of our comprehensive term, would here be as insufficient as the word hurricane for the description of all kinds of atmospheric disturbances; temblor, vibracion, tremor, golpe, rasgo, rasga, terremoto, express only a part of the wild scale between a vibration and a wall-breaking shock. Of temblors the city has at the very least a semi-weekly supply; golpes (involving broken windows and fractured brick walls) occur about twice a year—in some years every month. Last year Caracas weathered fourteen or fifteen of them. During the disastrous week in September I had a remarkable proof how familiar long experience has made the populace with the attendant and prospective phenomena of the various kinds of earthquakes, and also how impossible it is to predict the day of their advent. As a general rule, a turbulent spring is followed by a quiet summer; and when I deposited my surveying instruments in the Posade de San Gabriel, the landlord congratulated me on the prospect of a tie-upo mas pacifico, a period of more than usual peace. There had been two severe shocks in the proceeding month, and no end of temblors, and the probabilities were that the rest of the year would make amends. The atmospheric indications were also more favorable; the ominous mist of the coast range had cleared away, and for a week or so we could hope to sleep in peace. That was on the 5th of September. The following day was even brighter. A light haze veiled the horizon of the Orinoco Valley, where the rainy season still resisted the influence of the trade-winds, but not a cloud approached the coast plain. The air was both clear and cool. But in the afternoon, about an hour before sunset, I heard a sound of hurried foot steps on the front steps of the hotel, and the guests on the veranda put their heads together.

"What is it?" I inquired. "The stage from Guarenas?"

"No; I wish it was," said the landlord. "The driver could tell us about it, I suppose. They say there has been another temblor on the river, all the way from Guarenas to Pao."

"Yes, and clear across the coast," added one of the new-comers. "The Artregas in Santa Rita [the northern suburb of Caracas] are quite sure that they felt it in their own garden. It jarred the glass in their garden house."

"Well," said the landlord, "if it is not a local shake, we need not care. The uplanders have not had their fair share, anyhow."

The stage was late that evening. Between Santa Rita and the hotel, the driver had been stopped at nearly every street corner, and his arrival filled the house with newsmongers. There had been two very perceptible jars at Guarenas, and half an hour after he had left the village he had heard a many-voiced shout, very likely a signal of something worse than a temblor. Guarenas is the alarm station of the Oraonco track. Its valley seems to be the very center of the Caracas earthquake region, and an alarm cry, or sometimes the boom of an old howitzer, is a well-understood danger-signal for the neighboring villages.

"Yes, that settles it," said the landlord. "It gets a golpe de fuera [a shock from the outer regions, a non-local disturbance], and it may reach all the way to Cumana."

The local earthquakes seem to have their center in the mountains of Caracas, and seldom reach the coast, while the pandemic shocks are supposed to originate in the Andes of New Granada, and often shake the continent from the Isthmus to the mouth of the Orinoco.

"At what time to-morrow," I inquired "do you think we shall have another shake?"

"It will be sooner than to-morrow, if it comes at all," said the posadero, "but it will not ruin us, or we should have had a share of it before this."

The night was clouded, but certainly not sultry and at nine o'clock the streets were full of promenaders. Two hours later I was awakened by the rattling of a passing carriage, mingled with the hum of so many voices on the veranda, that I was not quite sure if the sudden vibration of window-shutter came from below or from the window of my bed-room. The next moment all was absolutely still. Was it the expectant silence of a whole city listening for a reptition of the tremor? I do not know if the heavier earthquake shocks are preceded by any sensible, though inaudible, symptoms; but I remember that in walking toward the window I clutched the bed-post just before the house was shaken by a violent concussion, directly followed by several short, sharp jolts, such as the occupants of a heavy coach might feel if the freak of a runaway horse should jerk the vehicle to the top of a narrow platform, and then rattle it down a flight of steps on the other side. There was a general rush down-stairs. "Never mind the bottles, Frank," I heard the landlord call out to one of the waiters. "Just move the cupboard back, and shut the windows. Say, run back and tell Pablo [his youngest son] to hurry up." "No, it is not over yet," he replied to a sotto voce remark of the professor. The people of Caracas seemed to share that opinion. There was a light in nearly every window, and the square was nearly full of refugees, while a number of serenos, or night-watchmen, ran from house to house, and knocked hurriedly at every unopened door. The capital of Venezuela signalizes its loyalty by the consumption of native wines, and the sleep of some extra patriotic burgher might be earthquake proof.

"Yes, that was a globe traversal," remarked the landlord, "a transverse shock, that did not come from our mountains, but merely crossed them on its way to the coast. If it goes in its old track, I am afraid the people of Rio Chico will have to build their cabins over again, this third time since last February."

The sky had cleared up, and a late moon brightened the house-tops with its peaceful light; but now and then the windows rattled ominously, and the watchmen were still hammering away from door to door, when nature found a way to second their efforts in a very effectual manner. A shock like the thump of an explosion shook the town, and on the lower steps of the veranda (resting on nearly level ground) I felt a push, as if the flag stones under my feet had been dislodged by a sideward blow. All along the street pieces of broken glass and stucco rattled down on the pavement; the assembly on the plaza swelled suddenly to a vociferous crowd; the great bell of the Alta Gracia rang out a booming alarm peal; and a minute after a six-horse carriage came tearing down the street with the impetus of a firemen's team—the patrol wagon, going to the penitentiary to remove and guard the prisoners. The bells paused for a moment, and "Dios, Dios, ten piedad!" (Have mercy, Lord!) resounded through the streets as plainly as words spoken in a closed room; for I believe that the prayer was uttered by half the inhabitants of the populous town. There was no kneeling in the streets, and no ceremonies; the cry the cry came from their hearts, and though nobody shouted, the thirty thousand voices swelled the chorus, above all the din and tumult of the distracted city. For the next ten minutes the clatter of the falling debris continued, as if the buildings were still vibrating from the after affects of the first concussion; for the occasional underground rumblings felt rather like the recoil of a distant shock. But presently the multitude crowded toward the up-town quarters. There was a panic in one of the river suburbs, and even through the tramp of the general flight we could hear the distant echo of the outcry that meant something more than the yells of an idle mob. The warehouse of the associated foreign merchants had fallen, and the custom-house building was dislocado—disjointed and top-heavy, and going to collapse. Rumor added that the Plaza de la Torre was a mass of ruins; the mischief was spreading; the prophecy of Doctor Oritz—a local Vennor—was coming to pass.

"All possible," said the landlord; "but we are safe. It's spreading northward; it has passed us, and the golpes de fuera never turn back."

He said this in a tone of calm conviction and, indeed, soon after locked his office door, and sent his children to bed.

The next morning the crowd around the telegraph office almost blocked the street. Caracas has no Associated Press, and the telegraph companies issue official bulletins at five or ten cents each, according to the size and import. This morning their middle-men charged a real (about twelve and a half cents), and twice as much to buyers who would not wait, for the demand exceeded the supply. The earthquake had shaken the whole north coast of South America, besides five of the seven isthmus states, with the main axis of its progress along the track of 1876. The shock at twenty minutes after two o'clock a. m. had traveled three thousand miles in less than an hour. Guayaquil, Ventura, Maracaibo, Caracas, Aspinwall, and San Juan de Nicaragua had been visited by a coast wave, that tore ships from their moorings, and buried hundreds of shore-dwellers under the ruins of their houses. In Venezuela the Arauco track had deflected the main wave, and the coast towns had suffered comparatively little, with the exception of Rio Chico, (the very place my host had mentioned when he recognized the shock as a golpe traversal), where half the buildings, mostly adobe cabins, had been prostrated by the first concussion. In Caracas itself the total loss amounted to eight persons killed, twenty wounded, sixty-two buildings totally destroyed, and sixty-seven "disjoined" or badly cracked. The serious damage was confined almost wholly to the river suburb. The up-town quarters had escaped with broken stuccoes, and the famous Calle de San Martin was again entirely unharmed. In 1812 fourteen thousand persons were killed by the fall of their dwellings.

Caracas, founded in 1567, has been visited by eighteen terremotos, or earthquakes of the first magnitude. Golpes, rumblings, and tremors are never counted, but most amount to an average of sixty appreciable shocks per year; involving an average yearly damage of three hundred thousand dollars, or an equivalent of per capita tax of four dollars. This impost has taxed the ingenuity of the inhabitants, and taught them some useful lessons. Projecting basement corners (giving the house a slightly pyramidal appearance) have been found safer than absolutely perpendicular walls; mortised corner-stones and roof-beams have saved many lives when the central walls have split from top to bottom; vaults and keystone arches, no matter how massive, are more perilous than common wooden lintels, and there are many isolated buildings in the city. In many streets broad iron girders, rivated to the wall, about a foot above the house-door, run from house to house along the front of an entire square. Turret-like brick chimneys, with iron top-ornaments, would expose the architect to the vengeance of an excited mob; the roofs are flat, or flat terraced; the chimney-flues terminate near the eaves in a perforated lid Every house has its lado seguro, or safety side, where the inhabitants place their fragile property; and there is a supposed and not altogether imaginary connection between north sides and security. The trans-continental shocks moved from west to east, the local ones from east to west, and sometimes from northeast to northwest; so that in two out of three cases the west and east walls have been stricken broadside, while no shock has ever approached the town from the north—that is, from the direction of the sea. A native of Venezuela would laugh at the idea that a terremoto is an upheaval of the ground. The movement of dislodged rocks, the disjointment of house walls and their way of falling, the motions of a tidal wave during the progress of an earthquake, all prove that the shock is a lateral push, and that its operation could be imitated on a small scale by covering a table with loose pebbles, card-houses, etc., and striking the edge of the board. Bedsteads, experts say, should not be placed too near a window; for if the wall gives way it is apt to split along the weakest line of the masonry. For the same reason it is unlucky to stand in an open door. The safest place, during the progress of an earthquake, is the north side, or the centre of a room, or else the middle of the open street. I noticed that the owner of a lucky house is apt to overrate its stability; for even in the perilous districts the markets are often crowded with buyers and sellers, while an adjoining street resounds with the crash of falling bricks. Low water, not proceeded by an unusual drought, is a suspicious sign; and if the Cara springs fails at the same time, true believers go to bed with their boots on, although skeptics assert that both phenomena are apt to prophesy after the event. A mist in the afternoon is regarded as a harbinger of mischief, and in order to distinguish it from a common dust-haze the natives watch the wooded heights of San Sebastian; for during the dry season the paramos—the treeless table-lands north of the city—are in a chronic state of haziness.

Tender-footed cats may feel a vibration before it becomes distinct enough to effect a bell-frame, but most animals are as indifferent to such portents as to their fulfillment. A moderately well-rooted forest tree can stand an earthquake better than any building, and to the inhabitants of the prairies the most violent trembling of the ground can cause nothing but a trifling inconvenience, a momentary difficulty to preserve their equilibrium. On the pastures of Venezuela cattle graze peacefully the year round, except in the mountains, where the noise of falling rocks sometimes stampedes a whole herd. Still there is a tradition that, a few hours before the catastrophe of 1812, a Spanish stallion broke out of its river suburbs, and took refuge in the eastern highlands. Caracas is moving eastward; the upper (northwestern) suburbs grow from year to year, while the streets below the mint exhibit manifold signs of neglect. The agricultural population of the surrounding country has steadily increased, for crops are not materially the worse for a periodical instability of the ground, except perhaps in the orange district of Valencia, and at the mouth of the coast rivers, where tidal waves have often submerged the littoral plantations. Intelligent observers, therefore, predict that, in spite of local and imported earthquakes, the population of Northern Venezuela will continue to increase, but that the present site of Caracas will ultimately be abandoned.—Horace D. Warner in March Atlantic.

Miscellany.

A Cincinnati ladies' board of charities recently visited a destitute family, the head of which had just died. The corpse was found laid out in good shape, and the widow weeping profusely. The ladies left money and sympathy, and departed. One of them went back to get her handkerchief, which she had dropped in the room. She found the corpse sitting up and kindly helping his widow to count their gift.

Declared Socialists, who aim to destroy law and order, usually have slight hesitation in plotting for the removal of those who stand in their way, yet it sometimes comes, difficult as well as disagreeable to realize the plots. A young man of Prague, who had the honor to belong to an assassination club, hanged himself the other day because of his unwillingness to take the life of one of the chief officers of the city in accordance with the orders of his club. He wrote his parents that if he had not carried out the request he would have been assassinated by his colleagues.

A meteor of extraordinary size and brilliancy shot across the Virginia sky Sunday morning, exploding with a loud report, and creating intense excitement in places where it was seen and heard. In Lousia county, Va, the windows and doors were shaken, and many believed that it was an earthquake. Superstitious negroes were very much frightened, and those who witnessed the phenomenon are greatly exercised to account for its rather extraordinary appearance. At Fredericksburg the explosion was followed by loud detonations and tremors of the earth. The light was very brilliant and of a blue tint. All along the route it traversed persons were awakened by the noise and shocks.

A party of police started from Portland, Me., to meet a train on the eastern railroad which was reported to be bringing a car-load of beer. They went as far as the station at Cape Elizabeth, met the train, and boarded the car containing the contraband liquor. They forgot, however, to leave a rear guard outside, and presently found themselves locked in, friends of the beer having slipped up behind them, closed the door, and fastened it on the outside. Then the train began to move, carrying the police along, and did not come to a halt until they had crossed the borders of New Hampshire, and reached the station of Portsmouth. Here the police were beyond their jurisdiction. They had no power to interfere with the beer, and when released from imprisonment could only look with the best grace possible for some means of returning to Portland. They had to wait till the following evening before getting a chance to return, and arrived home in a very crestfallen condition.

It is gratifying to the friends of temperance to know that the efforts of the vast organization against the use of intoxicants in Great Britain are producing material good effects. During nine months of last year, while the importation of cocoa, coffee, and tea into that country have largely increased, the imports of brandies and wines have largely decreased. The increase in the import of tea alone is nearly 5,000,000 pounds. What elasticity the customs revenue of Great Britain has lately been exhibiting has been derived not from wines and spirits, but from the large consumption of non-alcoholic beverages. This branch of the drink revenue has been, at best, stationary, or, if the increase of population be taken into account, has been absolutely declining.

Cheese has been mentioned as the chief food of those religionists and others who, in European countries at least, object to the consumption of animal fibre, and introduce into their diet eggs and milk, butter and other products of the dairy. The cheese manufactured by the Trappists of the monastery of Port du Salut, which is now used by most of the monastic communities in France, is is one of the most perfect substitutes for animal food. It was confined to the locality where it is produced until the exposition in France in 1867, when it was then shown and a golden medal awarded to it. After this immense orders were sent to the monastery, and its success has since been so great that the monks not only use all the milk of their own cattle, but have been compelled to purchase every drop they can get from houses. This cheese is not as well known in this country or England as the Roquesort and other French cheese. It is, when fresh, a soft, pasty, mild, most palatable cheese, generally made in round cakes of from five to eight pounds in weight, and stamped with a cross and words showing its place of manufacture.

THE MODERN SPINSTER.

A Plea for the Dear, Good Souls Who Walk Life's Rugged Paths Alone.

The "old maid," as she has appeared on comic valentines, or furnished a subject for the exercise of much thin wit, has commonly been assigned to one of two classes. If to the sentimental, she was usually depicted with one or two limp curls at either side of a simpering face, a breast-pin made from the hair of a departed lover, and with a general affectation of girlishness in her dress and manner. She was excessively timid in the matter of mice and dark halls, and looked upon any and every man with awe and admiration, seeing in each one a possible or probable lover. If she was assigned to the strong-minded class (I use the term in its popular acceptance) she was tall and angular, wore her hair twisted fiercely in a tight little knot, scorned useless adornments of her person, and dividing her time between driving children and animals from her premises and slandering her neighbors—her hand against every man and every man's hand against her.

Now, either the pictures were at fault or the types have passed away, for the old maid of to-day is quite another person. In the first place, she is not sentimental. Indeed, I do not know but she leans in the opposite direction, being rather cool and practical. However that may be, neither is she a man-hater. For, having ceased to regard men in the light of lovers, she has discovered that they make very good friends, and it is quite likely that among her acquaintances there are a number whom she regards with a clear sighted, slightly judicial but very genuine friendship. And with the friendship has grown up a certain pity or sympathy; for going out into the world herself, she has gained some idea of the burdens men carry, and the odds against which they fight. And on this footing she meets her brother man in society or business with a frank friendliness which is very comfortable for both sides.

Secondly, she does not slander her neighbors; she has other things to engross her time and thoughts, for she is a busy woman. If fortune has been kind to her, she keeps up some old house in in old-fashioned state; she is prominent in church affairs; her name appears among the officers of employment societies and orphans' homes. Her scrutiny of "cases" is rigorous, but once satisfied, she gives with discreet liberality. Her advice is solicited and respected. She is a recognized power in the community. If fortune has been less generous with her, and she depends on her head or hands for support, what work she does in done faithfully; for being relieved of the necessity of keeping one eye on the door for the coming man, she is able to devote all her energies to the business in hand, and it is an established fact that some of the clearest heads, quickest wits, and most facile fingers are found among these same old maids.

After her day of useful work she goes home to her cozy room, (plainly or elegantly furnished, it is quite sure to be cozy and home-like), and sits down by the fire with her magazine or new book, with none to molest or make her afraid. No visions of kneeless little trousers or toeless stockings flit between her and the pages; she has no guilty half-consciousness of a pile of unmade shirts, whose neck-bands will invariably be a sixteenth of an inch too long or too short; but she rocks and reads, and lays up much mental food. She goes into society, (being socially inclined), where she sometimes opens her mouth with wisdom and talks on subjects outside the range of the shortcomings of servants, the last bit of scandal, or the cost of provisions.

I once heard it said by a very intelligent woman (herself married) that she did not enjoy the society of married women because they were always talking about the prices of things. Now, this seems a rather harsh criticism on those wives and mothers whose hearts are necessarily racked by the question of "prices," and who speak out of the abundance of their anxieties; but the fact remains that as staples of conversation they were not pleasant or profitable and it sometime happens that a husband will turn from consideration of these topics to converse with some woman who has time and space to think of other things—which, considering the fact that this mental limitation in his wife has been caused by marrying him, always looks unbecoming in him.

The old maid of to-day, besides being a worker and a reader, is a traveler. She takes little trips in the summer, with other congenial spinsters, to the mountains or sea-shore. She ranges from Maine to California—she even goes "abroad" governed only in her perigrinations by circumstances or the length of her purse—which purse, be it long or short, is hers. Her days are days of pleasantness, and her nights are nights of peace. She goes to bed when she pleases, and does not leave one ear uncovered to listen for the uncertain steps and wavering night-key of a late coming husband. Neither does she turn restlessly on her pillow beside a sober, snoring spouse and wonder, wonder where the childrens schoolbooks or the family flannels are to come from; but she drops into a quiet, peaceful slumber to dream of her old love, and wakes to wonder whether married life with him could ever have become the sordid, meagre affair which it is to so many husbands and wives.

Do you say: "A selfish life, lived only for her own ease and comfort!" I do not think the charge of selfishness can be proved against the sisterhood; for they who read history, or keep their eyes open, cannot fail to see that a large share of the hard and disagreeable work of the world has been, and is being done, by single women. In hospitals, in reformatory institutions, in the families of relatives, they spend and are spent, physically, mentally, and financially, for the good of others. A lonely life? Yes, sometimes, but loneliness is not the worst evil in life; it is bliss compared to uncongenial or half-hearted companionship, and a silence broken only by the creak of one's rocker is melody beside fault-finding and bickering. She herself is sometimes invited to change her condition, for the masculine mind (of a certain order) reasons with great perspicacity that a woman who can take care of herself might, with a little extra exertion, look out for two. So he comes and asks her to exchange the pen, or ferule, or yard stick for the broom and frying-pan. Does she in accordance with the popular idea, say an eager "Yes," before the question is fairly on his lips? Not at all. She looks at him with a calmly reflective eye, and in nine cases out of ten, says: "No, I thank you," and in the tenth case sometimes wishes afterward that she had.—Hester Stewart in Springfield Republican.

FARMERS' COLUMN.

Agricultural Items.

If you want to know how to build a silo, send fifty cents to the Orange Judd Co., 751 Broadway, N. N., for Prof. Thurber's book, "Silos and Ensilage."

Professor E. M. Shelton warns farmers of the West that severe weather destroys the germ of corn kept in open cribs and other exposed places, a fact especially verified by the experience of 1873 in many parts of the Union. He advises planting a definite number of kernels in a pan of dirt under the kitchen stove and noting the percentage that sprout.

Within a radius of ten miles of Ann Arbor, Mich., are 600 acres of peach orchard containing 100,000 trees, and more will be planted this spring. The loss or fruit-buds so far the local Courier says, does not amount to more than one-fourth, if so many.

To ebonize pine wood wash the wood three or four times with a boiling decoction of logwood, allowing it to dry between each application. Then wash it with a solution of acetate of iron, which is made by dissolving iron filing in vinegar. This stain is very black and penetrates to a considerable depth into the wood, so that ordinary scratching or chipping does not show the original color.

An immature animal should not be used for breeding. At 3 years a mare has got her full growth, and breeding will tend to prevent full development of the form. Another year will secure this, when the fuller maturity willl also give better form to the colt. It would be well to work young mares of this age moderately, as the exercise assists the proper deveelopment of muscle and tends to make them docile and more manageable.

An exchange says; It is sometimes forgotten that "in wintering colts the first year a small feed twice a day of oats or other grain will well repay the cost. If colts are ever stunted it is during the first Winter. After that they will keep growing on good hay with no grain, and the danger of injuring from to much life in young horses makes it advisable to feed grain sparingly or not at all until they are ready to work. But with colts taken from the dam in the Fall the only danger is from too little rather than too much spirit."

For and About Women.

Miss Adelaide A. Manter, Industry Me., took the old homestead when her brothers sought other business and her father's health failed, and in ten years has increased its grass-producing capacity to three or four times the original amount, and made the farm one of the best paying ones in the county. A young orchard gives excellent return, and there is gold in the fleece and feet of her flock of sheep.

The recipe for Pan Dowdy of sixty years ago: "Pare, quarter and fill to heaping a pudding dish with any kind of apples that are not very acid; salt to taste, cover with a crust made rich or plain as desired; make an opening with a knife to let out air, bake a nice brown in a slow oven for four hours; then remove from the oven, take off the crust and break it into small pieces; season with sugar as desired; place in a dish alternate layers of apple and crust, the last being of apple; let stand an hour, then you will have a delicious dish for supper."

For making the crullers of forty years ago: "Eight eggs, one pound of sugar, six ounces of butter, two gills of thick cream, cinnamon and sufficient flour to make stiff enough to roll out; fry in lard like doughnuts." 2. Annie sends the following: "Two cups of sugar, one cup butter, two eggs, two cups sour milk, one teaspoonful of baking powder, flour to make a tolerably stiff dough. 3. One egg, one teaspoonful, of melted butter, three tablespoonfuls sugar; make very stiff with flour, roll rather thin; they will fry quickly. Take from the fat well drained and dip them in sugar." The old lady who sends this has it used since 1825.

In a country home, on a high, dry, breezy hill, the doctors were puzzled to account for successive deaths until they found a slophole in the cellar and a wooden drain, also opening under the house, but with long choked-up outlet. Leaving tidiness out of the question, there is no safer way of disposing of such waste than by pouring it over the ground, or about trees and plants, provided it is not emptied in one place so long as to shut off the air from any of it, or from the soil. The oxygen of the atmosphere which burns the most offensive and dangerous refuse into harmless ashes in fire, cremates just as effectively but by a much slower process all such matter that it can reach, even at ordinary air temperature.

Many annuals are very desirable for the greenhouse for winter blooming. These should be sown in July or August. The most important are browallia, candytuft, German stocks, lobelia, mignonette, schizanthus, sweet alyssum and dwarf nasturtiums. Many varieties as well as the above may be sown in the fall and winter for blooming early in the spring, such as acroclinium, ageratum, antirrhinum, apple-scented geranium, China pinks, dianthus, mimulus, myosotis, pansey, petunias, phlox drummondii, salpiglossis, salvia, verbena, vinca and others.—Thorburn and Titus' Catalogue.

How Fashion is Fixing Such Things as Skirts.

From the New York Evening Post.

Skirts kilted or box-pleated half their length or more are quite as fashionable as ever. These trimmings, although simple in effect, take a large quantity of material and for this reason, perhaps, have never become common. The wide full pleats, known among dressmakers as "tuyaux," falling in rounded folds like organ-pipes, are more suitable for thick materials, such as velvet, plush and cloth, than flatly pressed pleats. Great variety of effects can be produced in pleated skirts by the arrangement of the folds. Among the favorite styles are groups of five flat pleats, alternating with one broad one, down the centre of which is set a passementerie band, a bias fold of brocade, plaid or an embroidery pattern in silk floss or braid work. Another has the outer edges of a hollow triple boxpleat falling over a band of velvet, these bands being sewn upon the plain skirt before the box-pleated trimming is set on. A third fashion is to cut an opening under every fifth kilting, through which a ribbon or silk scarf is passed, the ends being brought outside and tied in a bow, which falls over the kilting on the front of the skirt.

The pointed cuirass bodice with paniers will still be the height of fashion for spring costumes. This style of dress is very generally becoming to ladies, young and old, tall and short, slender and stout. Some of the newly-imported dresses show a deep apron overskirt applied to a pointed bodice or a little flat pleat, which extend all the way around from front to back. This style of fastening the tunic to the bodice is newer than shirring or pleats set outside the edge of the bodice. Panier draperies and scarfs are arranged in a great variety of ways. They frequently have the two sides differently disposed. The same method holds good in the adjusting of the folds of the apron overskirt or of the polonaise, one side of which may be as long and as plain as a panel while the other is arranged as panier or a scarf caught up in many folds.

New spring bonnets for evening wear, are in the Valois style, with soft crowns and shirred brims. Many of them are made of delicately-tinted velvets, like pale pink or mauve, with tarsades and bows of ottoman silk run through with jewel-headed pins. Others are made of cream-hued satin, wreathed with peach blossoms, arbutus buds and leaves, or spring violets mingled with cream lace, tinted in the centre of each scallop with a delicate hue matching the flowers of the wreath.

Early Peas.

There are two distinct classes of peas those with small round seeds and others with much larger, irregularly-shaped peas, the surface of which is wrinkled. The wrinkled seeded, or marrowfat peas are as much better than the others as sweet corn is superior to field corn. The round peas, while not so good, are much hardier and earlier than the others. Unless the soil is warm, and they germinate quickly, wrinkled peas will decay before they can come up. The round peas are vastly better than no peas, and are very acceptable until the others come. To have early peas, they must be sown early—the earlier the better. After the soil has thawed for the first four inches, even if it is solid below, sow peas. If the ground was manured and plowed last autumn, all the better; if not, select the richest available spot and open a drill four inches deep. Peas should be covered deeper than most other seeds. For varieties the early Kent is one of the best; it has almost as many names as there are dealers. Daniel O'Rourke is one of the names of a good strain of this pea. Carter's first crop is another good variety, and every spring new extra early sorts are sent from England, which usually turn out to be the old Early Kent with a new name. The peas should be sown in the bottom of the drill rather thickly, at least one every inch, and at first covered with about an inch of soil. It is well to put about four inches of coarse stable manure over the rows, this is to be left on in cold days, but when it is sunny and warm pull it off with the rake and let the sun strike the soil over the peas, replacing it at night. When the peas sprout, gradually cover them with fine warm soil, placing the coarse manure over them as needed, until the soil reaches the level of the surface. If a ridge of soil, a few inches higher than the peas, be drawn up on to each side of the row, it will greatly protect them from cold winds. When the plants are a few inches high draw some fine soil up to them, and stick in the brush. When the soil becomes dry and warm, the main crop of wrinkled peas may be sown.—Dr. Thurber in American Agriculturist.

Early Pie Plant.

Nice, Fresh, crisp pie plant early in the spring, when manipulated just as a good cook can do such things, is worth all of the poor, wilted vegetables of all kinds which will come to us from the south for a month. In view of the fact that it is toothsome and healthy, and so easily raised, no one has an excuse to do without it unless he has no sugar in the house. To raise it requires little space and less work, and it never fails. A good coat of manure in the fall and a little hoeing in the spring, and every family can have pies equal to the best. And yet nearly half of the families in the country have neither pie-plant, strawberries, currants, raspberries or black berries. And yet the husband of that wife promised faithfully to support and cherish that wife.—Des Moines Register.

Everybody's Arbor Day Comes in Spring.

If the governor of your state has not appointed an arbor day, don't wait. Plant a few trees for ornament, shade or wind-break. Even a lazy way of planting is better than none. A careless and easy-going Ohio man, whose farm lay near a moderate sized city, got the toppings of a white willow fence line. He turned them up and planted them in two rows along the road by his farm. They made roots and in time grew into a handsome avenue of trees, and a retired citizen admried them so much that he bought them at a pretty long price as a residence. This is not the way to plant trees, but will do on a pinch for willow, cottonwood, etc.—Cincinnati Gazette.

Improvement of Roads.

The president of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, speaking of the improvement of roads, says: "Next in importance to drainage to the farmers of this state is the more permanent improvement of the highways. In many portions of the state the surface water must find an outlet by the roadside ditches, in which cases the improvement of the roads must precede tile or surface drainage. There is no question but that every dollar judiciously expended in constructing what are termed permanent roads, adds much more than the amount to the lands adjoining or accessible therefrom. The fact that farming lands in other states where good roads have been in use for years are two or three times as much as better lands in this state, adjoining equally as good markets, is conclusive evidence that our people have not investigated this matter. It is well known to the farmers of many sections of this state that at the most leisure season of the year, when farm products generally sell to the best advantage, the condition of the roads makes it impracticable to market the crops."

Going West.

It would be a difficult task to undertake, to explain to old inhabitants of New England, why the young men going west from that section become so infatuated with the new country and customs they see, or what constitutes the actual difference between the two sections. The following very truthful article was published under the above head in the Century for December, and accords exactly with the observation and experience of thousands who left New England homes to seek their fortunes in the west.

"The young man in the older communities of the East, reading of the marvelous growth of this new western country, often asks himself whether he could not wisely join the ranks of the next annual migration. No doubt the question, "Shall I go West?" is the uppermost problem in the minds of thousands of the young men of the East, who have still their careers to make, and have not gained a secure and promising footing in the business world. It is a question which each must answer for himself, and concerning which no advice can be given that would be of universal application. It would be a grievous mistake to suppose that a change of longitude alone insures success. Idleness, incompetency, and a nerveless, drifting disposition, have no better chance in Montana than in Massachusetts. Indeed, there are some men who run along fairly well in the East, in the grooves of custom and of established acquaintance and business connections, who would make lamentable shipwreck if set adrift in a new Western community.

"On the other hand, the chances for a young man of average pluck and energy are unquestionably much better in the west than in the east. He shares the advantage of being among the first to open a fresh store-house of natural wealth. He gets the first dividend on the increase of value resulting from bringing population upon the soil. The land he buys for three or four dollars an acre, or gets for nothing by homestead settlement, soon becomes worth ten or fifteen. If he embarks in trade or any mechanical pursuit, his wares or his service are in brisk demand, because all the new-comers around him require goods and implements. Then there is a certain stimulus in the moral atmosphere caused by the ambitions and energies of a new community full of hope and activity, which makes hardships easy to bear and causes buoyancy of spirits.

"Western people find it hard to make their friends in the east understand just what they mean when they speak of the difference in the business and social tone of the two sections. It is a difference to be felt rather than defined. There is vastly more energy and more hope per capita of the population in new communities than old, and the immigrant feels at once the resulting stimulus. It braces up the listless and the desponding, and makes even the most active man conclude that there is a deal more in him in the way of work and ideas that he supposed. Many a young man who would have remained a clerk or a small-salaried employee of some kind all his life, had he said in the East, becomes, amid the larger opportunities of the West, a "leading citizen," and the owner of a fine farm or a prosperous business.

"The young man going West can, therefore, count upon the opportunities of obtaining good land at small cost, the business openings growing out of the wants of a new community, and the moral incentive that comes from contact with hopeful, enterprising people. If he does not succeed in gaining a full measure of independence in the course of ten years, the reason will lie in his own disposition. He will either lack energy and capacity, or he will be so much a creature of habit and so thoroughly the growth of an older civilization that he cannot adjust himself to the new environments. There are men, as well as trees, that will not thrive when transplanted. The intending emigrant would do well to study his own disposition carefully, and make sure that he is not of that kind."

Personal Matter.

Mr. Paul Dana, son of Mr. Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun, will have editorial charge of that paper during the absence of his father in California. He is a Harvard graduate, and a gentleman fully competent for the position.

S. G. Forrester, a prosperous planter of Albany, Ga., wrote to his finance asking her to choose a day for their marriage. She replied respectfully that she would give him an answer the next day. He learned from the newspaper the next morning that she had been married the evening before and had gone to her new home.

A young man anxious for a wife thus advertises in a South Australian paper: "A young gentleman, aged respectively twenty-four, having an income of £300 a year, would like to correspond with a young lady with a view to matrimony. She must be well learned in domestic affairs, age not to exceed twenty-three; money no object. Please enclose photo."

Senator Beck of Kentucky, who came a poor boy to this country from Scotland, says the Courier Journal, worked on the same farm in Livingston county, that state, that secretary Teller worked upon. When they met in the senate Mr. Beck said: "Well Henry, when we used to drive old Brown's oxen we never expected to meet in the United States senate." "No, Jim," said Mr. Teller, "we didn't know there was such a place."

"No wonder that Emerson started," says the London World, "on being told by 'George Eliot' that the one book she found most interesting of all books was Rousseau's Confessions." To say nothing of the want of tact displayed in not specifying Emerson's own essays, when one considers the nature of Jean-Jacques' so-called confessions it must certainly have been a little startling to a sober-minded man to hear these records of what Burke calls 'disgustful amours' vaunted as the favorite reading of a young lady."

Lady Lonsdale was seriously injured a fortnight ago by a fall from her horse. If ladies share with men the glories of the English hunting field, they are also partakers of its pains and perils. Only the other day in England a lady was killed by her horse's rearing, and a lady in Gloucestershire was dragged a fearful distance. In Meath, within a very short period, of two lady "followers" one was well-nigh drowned by her habit-skirt catching in the pommel when her hunter fell into a swollen stream. Another put her shoulder out dropping into a lane. Both ladies were very good riders.

The composer Wagner died of a syncope, says a cable to the New York Herald. He was suffering from disease of the heart and was staying in an apartment of the Vendremini Palace. He had yesterday a severe attack, but he had resolved on making an excursion in a gondola. He had another violent seizure in the afternoon. His doctors were summoned and found that his case was hopeless. He died in the arms of his wife and surrounded by his children. Wagner lately expressed the belief that "Parsifal" would be his last work, as he felt that he was soon going to die. He was seated in an armchair when he expired.

When the sermon was not satisfactory, Daniel Webster used sometimes to make a mental sermon on the text, and on one occasion, during a dull sermon, in Marshfield, he left his pew, walked down the aisle in deep thought, and suddenly returned to his seat and gave attention to the preacher. It was supposed that he had mentally ended his own sermon, and therefore mechanically got up to leave.

Daniel O'Connell's eldest daughter recently died in Glencullen, County Dublin, in the ninety-third year of her age. She was the widow of Mr. Christopher Fitzsimmons, formerly M. P. for that county. Mrs. Fitzsimmons inherited a share of the ability of her distinguished father. Her literary tastes were of a fine order, and she evinced considerable skill as an authoress. She was collecting materials for a life of her father at the time of her death.

Sec. 2. Every village which has been or shall be organized or incorporated under the general statutes, shall be hereafter governed according to the provisions of this chapter, to the end that uniformity of village government and equal privileges to all may be secured.

Sec. 7. If the court, after such hearing shall be satisfied of the correctness of such survey, and of the legality of said plat, and that all of the requirements of the statutes have been complied with; that the lands embraced in such petition or any part thereof ought justly to be included in said proposed village; that the interests of the inhabitants will be promoted thereby, it shall make an order, declaring that such territory, the boundaries of which shall be therein set forth by metes and bounds, and which may be enlarged or diminished by such court, from the boundaries specified in said application, as justice may require, shall be an incorporated village by the name specified in said application, and in such order it shall designate three persons, electors residing on said territory, whose duty it shall be to give notice of an election in said incorporated village, as provided by section ten of this act.

Sec. 8. And in like manner the persons so appointed by the court in said proposed additional territory shall give notice of a meeting of the electors thereof to be held within thirty (30) days of the date of said order, at some convenient place therein to be named in such notice, for the purpose of determining whether or not such territory shall be annexed to such village. At such meetings the polls shall be opened at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and shall be kept open until four o'clock in the afternoon, when they shall be closed. Twenty-second—To purchase, build, or lease and maintain, and regulate a watchhouse, or place for the confinement of offenders against the ordinances and by-laws, and for temporary detention of suspected persons.

Twenty-third—To appoint a board of health, which shall have all the powers of such boards under the general laws of the State; to provide hospitals, and regulate the burial of the dead, and return of bills of mortality; to declare what are nuisances, and to prevent or abate the same; to require the owner or occupant of any grocery, cellar, tallow chandler's soap factory, tannery, stable, barn, privy, sewer or other unwholesome or nauseous house, building or place, to remove or abate the same, or to cleanse it as often as may be deemed necessary for the public health; to direct the location and management of slaughter houses, and to prevent the erection, use or occupation of the same, except as authorized by them; to prevent persons from bringing, depositing or leaving within the village any putrid carcass, or other unwholesome substance; to require the owners or occupants of lands to remove dead animals, stagnant water, or other unwholesome substance from their premises and to provide for the cleaning and removal of obstructions from any river, stream, slough or watercourse within the limits of the village, and to prevent the obstruction or retarding of the flow of waters therein, or the putting of anything into the same which may be prejudicial to the health of the village [illegible] payment; and the clerk shall take a receipt thereon for such order. No village, or any officer thereof, shall have power to issue at any time any negotiable order or borrow money, except in the manner and for the purposes expressly declared by statute.

LAYING OUT OR ALTERING STREETS, ALLEYS, ETC.

Sec. 23. Whenever the village council shall intend to lay out and open, change, widen or extend any street, lane, alley, public grounds, square or other places, or to construct and open, alter, enlarge or extend drains, canals or sewers, or alter, widen or straighten water-courses therein, or take ground for the use or improvement of a harbor, and it shall be necessary to take private property therefor, they shall cause an accurate survey and plat thereof to be made and filed with the recorder, and they may purchase or take by donation such grounds as shall be needed by agreement with the owners, and take from them conveyances thereof to the village for such use or in fee; but otherwise they shall by resolution declare their purpose to take the same and therein describe by metes and bounds the location of the proposed improvements and the land proposed to be taken therefor, defining separately each parcel and the amount thereof owned by each distinct owner, mentioning the names of owners or occupants so far as known, and therein fix a day, hour and place when and where they will apply to a justice of the peace, resident in such village, for a jury to condemn and appraise the same. They shall thereupon cause to be made by the recorder a notice of the adoption of such resolution embracing a copy thereof and notifying all parties interested that the council will, at the time and place named, apply to the justice named for the appointment of a jury to condemn and appraise such land. A copy of such notice shall be served by any constable on the owner of each such parcel of land to be taken if known and resident within the county, such service to be made in the manner prescribed for serving a summons in justice court, and the return of the officer shall be conclusive evidence of the fact stated therein. If the notice cannot be so given as to all the parcels, then the same shall be also published once in each week for three successive weeks, in a newspaper published in such village or county; and the affidavit of the printer or foreman of such newspaper shall be conclusive evidence of such publication. Such notice shall be served, and such publication made for three weeks, complete at least one week before the time fixed therein for such application. If any person so served with notice shall be a minor, or of unsound mind, the justice, before proceeding, shall, on the day fixed for hearing such application, appoint for him a guardian for the purpose of such proceeding, who shall give security to the satisfaction of the magistrate, and act for such ward.

Sec. 24. At the time and place fixed for such hearing, the application, accompanied by a copy of such resolution and such survey, and by proof of service of the notice, as provided in the last section, shall be filed with the justice, who shall thereupon make a list of twenty-four competent jurors, not interested, but residents of the village shall not be disqualified. He shall hear and decide any challenges for cause or favor, made to any one, and, if sustained, shall replace his name with an unobjectionable juror, until the list shall be perfected. Thereupon, under direction of such magistrate, each party—the village council by its representatives on one side, and owners of land or their agents present, or if none be present, or they disagree, a disinterested person appointed by the justice, on the other—shall challenge six names, one at a time, alternately, the village council beginning. To the twelve jurors remaining, such justice shall issue a venire, requiring them at an hour on a day named, not more than ten nor not less than three days thereafter, to appear before him to be sworn and serve as a jury to view lands and appraise damages, and at the same time, shall publicly adjourn the proceedings to the time and place so named; such venire shall be served by any constable, at least one day before such appointed time, by reading the same to each such juror, or by leaving a copy at his usual place of abode in the presence of a member of his family. The jurors summoned shall appear at the time and place named; and if any be excused by the justice, or fail to attend, he shall direct other disinterested persons to be forthwith summoned in their stead until twelve be obtained. The magistrate shall then administer to them an oath that they shall well and truly inquire into and determine the necessity for taking the lands mentioned in the resolution, and if found necessary the damages occasioned thereby, and faithfully discharge their duties as jurors according to law.

Sec. 25. Under the direction of such magistrate the jury shall view the lands to be taken, and shall then sit before him to hear such competent evidence as shall be produced by any party; and for such purposes such magistrate shall possess the same powers as a court in session with a jury, and if there be necessity, may adjourn the sitting from day to day. The jury shall render a separate verdict in writing, signed by them, in which they shall find whether it be necessary to take such lands or any part thereof for such purposes, describing such as they find necessary to be taken; and if any be found necessary to be taken, then a verdict or appraisement of damages, specifying therein the damages of each owner, and separately the value of the land taken for each, and the damage otherwise sustained by each by reason of the taking thereof, in estimating which they shall deduct therefrom any special benefit, if any, to be enjoyed by each from such improvements; and a majority of such jury may render such verdict or appraisement of damages and shall sign the same. Any technical error in such verdict may be immediately corrected, with the assent of the jury, and they shall be thereupon discharged, and their verdict filed by the magistrate. In case the jury shall fail to find a verdict, another jury shall be selected, summoned, sworn, and proceed in the same manner.

Sec. 26. Within ten days after verdict any land owner whose land has been found necessary to be taken may appeal from the award of damages to him, in such verdict, to the district court, and the village may likewise appeal from the award of damages to any owner by filing with such magistrate a notice of appeal, specifying whether the appeal is from the whole award to him or a part, and if a part, what part, and therewith an undertaking with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the magistrate, to pay all costs that may be awarded against such appellant on the appeal, and paying the magistrate for his return thereof. Any party not so appealing, shall be forever concluded by such verdict or appraisement. Upon an appeal being taken, the magistrate shall transmit to the clerk of the district court, within ten days, the notice of appeal and undertaking, and thereto annexed a copy of all papers and proceedings before him, with his certificate thereof. He shall, after the time for appealing is expired, file with the village recorder, annexed together, all the original papers, including the verdict, with a certificate by him thereof, and that no appeal has been taken from such verdict, except as the facts are, which he shall briefly specify; and the clerk shall record all such proceedings. Upon filing such transcript in the district court, the appeal shall be considered an action pending in such court, and be so entered, the land owner as plaintiff, the village as defendant, and be subject to trial and appeal to the supreme court. The case shall be tried by a jury unless waived, and costs shall be awarded against the appellant, if more favorable verdict be not obtained; otherwise, against the respondent. Upon entry of judgment, the clerk of the district court shall transmit a certified copy thereof to the village recorder.

Sec. 27. If the verdict of the jury first called find it necessary to take such land or any part thereof, the village board may, upon return thereof to the recorder, enact an ordinance in accordance therewith, for laying out, changing, widening or extending and opening any such street, lane, alley, public ground, square or other public place, or [illegible] owners of at least one-half the frontage on such side; and may order any sidewalk or gutter previously built to be put in repairs, when necessary, without petition. For the purpose of so improving any street or building, or repairing any sidewalk or gutter, the village council may levy and cause to be collected upon the lots, tracts or parcels of ground on such street or part of street improved, or on the side thereof, where only such sidewalk or gutter is to be built, and upon the owners thereof, a tax sufficient to pay the expense of constructing such improvement as ordered opposite such property to the center of the street, or such proportion thereof, not less than one-half, as they shall deem justly assessable to such property, if they shall think the whole ought not to be so assessed, in which case the remainder shall be paid from the village treasury. Every such tax for repair shall be for the entire cost of repairs in front of the property so assessed. If any tax levied under this section shall prove insufficient to pay the cost or proportion thereof assessed to such property, the village council may levy an additional tax thereon to make good such deficiency.

Sec. 31. Whenever the council shall levy any such tax as specified in the preceding section, they shall make out and deliver to a street commissioner of such village a list of the persons and a description of the property taxed, together with a warrant for the collection and expenditure of said tax, and thereupon the street commissioner shall notify the persons named in such tax list, by publishing a notice two weeks in some newspaper published in said village, if there be one, or by posting up notices in three or more public places in such village, and shall specify in such notice a time or times, not less than twenty days nor more than forty days from the date thereof, when the persons charged with taxes in such list may pay their taxes in labor, materials or money; and the persons charged with such tax may, at such time and place as may be required by the said street commissioner, pay their taxes in labor or materials; provided, the labor and materials offered in payment of such taxes are such as may be required by the said street commissioner, and done and furnished to his satisfaction. The street commissioner shall be provided with a book or memorandum by the village recorder, in which he shall keep an accurate account of all moneys coming into his hands by virtue of his office; the amount received and disbursed by him; the name of every person from whom money or labor is due; the amount paid in money or labor, and a correct account of all expenditures by him made as a street commissioner. The book containing the account so kept shall, at all times when required, be furnished for the inspection of the village council and ten days before the expiration of his term of office shall be handed to the village recorder, to be filed in his office for the inspection of the taxpayers in his district.

Sec. 32. At the expiration of forty days from the date of said notice given by the said street commissioner, he shall make out and deliver to the recorder of such village a certified list of the lots, pieces, or tracts of lands in said village upon which any such tax remains unpaid, with the amount of such delinquent tax upon each of said lots or parcels of land; and at any time before the first day of September any party liable may pay any such tax to the village recorder, who shall thereupon pay the same over to the village treasurer, taking his receipt therefor. And such recorder on the first day of September, or within five days thereafter, if any such tax remains unpaid, shall certify a copy of such delinquent taxes to the county auditor of his county, and the said auditor shall, upon the receipt of said statement and list, enter and carry out the same upon the proper tax lists, and they shall be collected the same as other taxes are collected, and, when collected paid over the same to the village treasurer. Every county treasurer who shall collect or receive any moneys on account of such delinquent taxes shall pay the same to the treasurer of the proper village and take duplicate receipts therefor, and file one of said receipts with the recorder of said village.

Sec. 33. No part of the streets or highways of any village shall be in any road district established by the town board, nor be under the control of town officers. Nor shall the town be liable for any damages occasioned by any insufficiency or want of repair thereof; and all bridges in such village shall be built, maintained and repaired by the village in which the same are situated. No overseers of highways shall be elected in or for any such village, but the poll tax shall be collected as hereinafter provided, and the streets, highways, and public places governed by the village council and officers of their appointment.

Sec. 34. The village council shall, on or before the fifteenth day of August in each year, by resolution, to be entered of record, determine the amount of corporation taxes to be levied and assessed on the taxable property in such village for the current year, which shall not exceed in any one year two per centum of the assessed valuation of such property. Before levying any tax for any specific purpose the board may, in their discretion, submit the question of levying the same to the village electors, at any special or general election, and in such manner as they may prescribe; when so submitted they shall be bound by the vote thereon. On or before the first day of September, in each year, the village recorder shall deliver to the county auditor a copy of all such resolutions, certified under his hand and the corporate seal of such village, and such auditor shall enter such taxes upon the tax books in the same manner as he is required to do in levying town taxes.

PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATION OF ORDINANCES.

Sec. 35. All prosecutions for violating any of the ordinances, rules or by-laws enacted under the provisions of this act, shall be brought in the corporate name of said village, and shall be commenced by warrant, upon complaint being made as required by law in criminal cases before justices of the peace; and the same proceedings shall be had therein as are required to be had by the laws of this State in criminal or civil actions before justices of the peace. Provided, that no warrant shall be necessary in any case of the arrest of the person or persons while in the act of violating any law of the State of Minnesota or ordinance of said village; but in such cases a complaint shall be made, which the justice shall reduce to writing, and the party be required to plead thereto, as to warrant in other cases; and the person or persons so arrested may be proceeded against in the same manner as if the arrest had been made by warrant. All processes issued by the justice of the peace of said village shall be directed to any constable of said village or county. It shall be a sufficient pleading of the by-laws or ordinances of said village to refer to the chapter and section thereof, which are hereby declared to have all the force and effect of general laws within the jurisdiction of said village, and it shall not be necessary to read or give them in evidence upon the trial of any proceeding or action, criminal or civil.

Sec. 36. Judgment shall be given, if for the plaintiff, for the amount of fine, penalty or forfeiture fixed by such ordinance, resolution or by-law, or such part thereof, if a discretion be given, as the court shall deem proportionate to the offense, together with the costs of suit; and shall in all cases further adjuge and order that in default of payment thereof the defendant be committed to the common jail of such county for such time not exceeding ninety days as the court shall think fit. If such payment be not forthwith made the justice shall make out a commitment stating the amount of judgment and costs and the time for which committed, and in the usual form of commitments by justices of the peace. Every person so committed shall be received and committed to prison by the keeper of the county jail, and kept at the expense of the county until the expiration of the time; but he shall be released by order of the justice on payment to him of such fine and costs or by due course of law.

essary, and to immediately proceed to lay out a road as directed by the judge in accordance with the prayer of the petition; provided, that no road shall be ordered by any judge to extend more than six miles outside of the judicial districts in which the application is made, and such road shall be extended beyond the districts only for the purpose of commencing or ending at some village or public road."

DRAINAGE.

82.

AN ACT to enable the owners of lands to drain and reclaim them when same cannot be done without affecting the lands of others; prescribing the powers and duties of county commissioners and other officers in the premises, and to provide for the repair and enlargement of such drains, and repealing certain acts therein specified, and declaring an emergency.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Section 1. That the board of county commissioners of any county shall have power, at any regular session, when the same shall be conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, or where the same will be of public benefit or utility, to cause to be constructed, as hereinafter provided, any ditch, drain or water course within said county.

Sec. 2. That before the board of commissioners shall establish any ditch, drain or water course, there shall be filed with the auditor of such county a petition, signed by one or more of the land owners whose lands will be liable to be affected by, or assessed for, the expense of the construction of the same, setting forth the necessity thereof, with a general description of the proposed starting point, route and terminus, and such petitioner or petitioners shall give a bond, with good and sufficient freehold sureties, payable to the state, to be approved by the auditor, conditioned to pay all expense in case the board of commissioners shall fail to establish such proposed ditch, drain or water course. As soon as said petition is filed said board shall, if in regular session, or at their next regular session, appoint three resident freeholders of the county, not interested in the construction of the proposed work, and not of kin to any parties interested therein, as viewers, to meet at a time and place specified by said board, preparatory to commencing their duties as hereinafter specified. And it shall be the duty of the auditor thereupon to issue to said viewers a certified copy of the petition and order of the board, who shall proceed, at the time set in said order, with a surveyor, who shall be a civil engineer, and shall make an accurate survey of the line of said ditch, drain or water course, from its source to its outlet; and they shall cause stakes or monuments to be set along said line, numbered progressively down stream, at each one hundred feet; and they shall make a computation of the total number of cubic yards of earth to be excavated and removed from said ditch, drain or water course; and an estimate of the total cost of construction of the whole work. And they shall set apart and apportion to each parcel of land, and to each corporate road or railroad, and to the county when public highways are benefited, a share of said work, in proportion to the benefits which will result to each from such improvement, and give location of each share, its length in feet, and the estimated number of cubic yards of earth to be removed therefrom, and the price per cubic yard, and the cost of the construction of each share or allotment separately, and specify the manner in which the work shall be done, and they shall have power, where they find it necessary, to provide for running said ditch under ground, through drain tiles or other materials, as they deem best, by specifying the size and kind of tile or other material to be used in such underground work, and shall estimate the cost of the same as a part of the total cost of the work, and they shall accurately describe as the same is described on the county tax duplicate, each parcel of the land to be assessed for the construction of said ditch, giving the number of acres in each tract assessed, and the estimated number of acres benefited, the amount that each tract of land will be benefited by construction of said work, and the amount that each tract is assessed therefor. And they shall, in tabular form, give the depth of cut, width at the bottom and width at the top, at the source, outlet, and at each one hundred foot stake or monument of said ditch, drain, or water course. And they shall also ascertain and give the names of the owners of the lands that are assessed for construction of said ditch, drain or water course, as far as they can be ascertained with reasonable inquiry and search of the public records, and report also whether or not the proposed ditch or drain will be of public utility.

Sec. 3. Whenever a public ditch, drain or water course is located wholly or in part in the bed of a private ditch already or partially constructed, the viewers shall make an estimate of the number of cubic yards of earth already excavated, and the cost of same, on each tract of land, and deduct the same from the assessment thereon.

Sec. 4. All lands benefited by a public ditch, drain or water course, shall be assessed in proportion to the benefits for the construction thereof, whether it passes through said lands or not, and the viewers, in estimating the benefits to lands not traversed by said ditch, shall not consider what benefits such lands shall receive after some other ditch or ditches shall be constructed, but only the benefits that will be received by reasons of the construction of the public ditch as it affords an outlet for the drainage of such lands.

Sec. 5. In locating ditch, drain or water course, the viewers may vary from the line described in the petition, as they deem best, provided they commence the ditch at the point described in the petition, and follow down the line therein described as near as practicable; and provided further that when there is not sufficient fall in length of the route described in the petition to drain the lands adjacent thereto, they may extend the ditch below the outlet named in the petition far enough, not exceeding one-half mile, to obtain a sufficent fall and outlet. And when it will not be detrimental to the usefulness of the whole work, they shall, as far as practicable, locate the ditch on division lines between lands owned by different persons; and they shall so far as practicable, avoid laying the same diagonally across the lands, but they must not sacrifice the general utility of the ditch to avoid diagonal lines. And all persons whose lands may be affected by said ditch, may appear before said viewers, and freely express their opinions on all matters pertaining thereto.

Sec. 6. In locating a public drain or water course, the viewers shall estimate the damages, if any, that any person or persons will sustain by reason of the construction of such ditch, and assess such damages to parties owing the lands benefited, in proportion as each tract of land is assessed for benefits.

Sec. 7. The viewers, if they find the route proposed is not such as best to effect the object sought, or that the proposed drainage can be affected as well in construction with a ditch necessary for the improvement of public highways already established, or such as may be thereafter required, shall proceed to establish the route; if the route proposed is upon a section line where a public road may be required, and in all cases in which the route proposed is along highways already established, the viewers shall locate the ditch at a sufficent distance from the center of such highway to admit of a good road along such central line; the earth taken from the ditch shall be so placed upon the roadway as to form a turnpike, and no nearer to the margin thereof than two feet, but in locating a drain as above the viewers shall not materially depart from the terminal points described in said petition.

Sec. 8. Said viewers may, after having met at the time and place specified in the order issued to them by the auditor, proceed immediately to perform their said duties, or adjourn from time to time, as best suits their convenience, and file their report with the auditor at least four weeks before the next regular meeting of said board of commissioners. Provided the water be high, or the weather inclement, they shall not be compelled to file the report until at least four weeks before the second regular meeting of said board after having received their orders from the auditor, but their report must then state the reason for such postponement. And if the viewers find the proposed ditch, drain, or watercourse not of public benefit or utility, they may report against the location of the same, in which case their report need only state that they find the proposed works not to be of public benefit or utility.

Sec. 9. It shall be the duty of the auditor on said report being filed, if it be in favor of the proposed work, to cause a notice to be given, by publication for three consecutive weeks, by posting three written copies of said notice in three public places in the township or townships where the proposed work is located, and one at the door of the court house in said county, of the pendency of said petition, and of the time set for the hearing thereof, which notice shall briefly state where said ditch commences at its source, through whose land it passes, and where it terminates at the outlet, together with the names of the owners of the lands that will be affected thereby, so far as they can be ascertained with reasonable inquiry and search of the public records in the offices of the clerk, recorder, auditor and treasurer; and at the same time the auditor shall mail a copy of the same to all non-residents whose address is known to him or can be ascertained by inquiring at the treasurer's office.

Sec. 10. Said board of commissioners, at the time set for the hearing of said petition, shall, if there is no remonstrance filed, proceed to hear said petition, and if they find the viewers' report is made in accordance with the provisions of this act, and it be in favor of the proposed work, and they find the proposed drain to be of public utility or conducive to public health, or of public benefit or convenience, they shall establish the same as specified in the report. But if the viewers report against the proposed work, the board shall dismiss the petition and tax the cost as hereinafter provided. And when damages are awarded to any person or persons, or corporations, as provided by this act, the board of commissioners shall order the same to be paid out strance against the ditch, as located by viewers on and across his lands, by setting forth his grievances therein, and any person deeming his assessment too high, or the damages allowed too low, may remonstrate, for such reasons, against the action of the viewers. Any person filing a remonstrance shall file with the same a bond payable to the State, with not less than two freehold sureties conditioned for the payment of all costs and expenses caused by such remonstrance, if the action of the viewers be sustained by reviewers to be appointed as hereinafter provided, such bond to be approved by board of commissioners. And thereupon said board shall appoint three disinterested, resident freeholders of the county, not of kin to any person interested in the proposed work as reviewers to meet at a specified time and place preparatory to commencing said review. And it shall be the duty of the auditor thereupon to issue to said reviewers a certified copy of the petition, and remonstrance, and order of the board in appointing such reviewers.

Sec. 12. Such reviewers shall meet at the time and place specified in the order issued to them by the auditor, and proceed to review the action and report of the viewers, as well as the entire premises through which the proposed work extends, and shall be vested with all power granted to the viewers originally, except that if they find the proposed work of public benefit or utility, they shall not change the line of the ditch, as located by the viewers at any other place or places than those complained of in the remonstrance, and there [then] only far enough to do justice to the party remonstrating. And they shall, before commencing said review, obtain from the auditor the report of the viewers, which they shall carefully preserve, and return to the auditor when they have completed their review, and they shall file with the auditor a report of their proceedings in the premises, after having subscribed and sworn to the same, at any time before the next regular meeting of said board; and if the reviewers sustain the action of the viewers, and make no change in the proposed work, their report need only state that, after having made full examination of the viewers' report, as well as the entire premises through which the proposed work extends, they find the account of the viewers just and correct, and that they sustain and approve the action of the viewers and their report.

Sec. 13. Upon the filing of the report of the reviewers, as required by the preceding section, the auditor shall, when the board of commissioners convenes in regular session, record the same, together with the proceedings had in the matter of the petition. And if said reviewers sustain and approve the action of the reviewers without change, all costs occasioned in consequence of the filing of the remonstrance, shall be taxed against the parties remonstrating, and a fee bill shall issue thereon by the auditors, and be collected as provided by law.

Sec. 14. If the reviewers find the proposed work of public benefit or utility, and do not sustain the entire action of the viewers, but make changes in favor of the remonstrants, the cost occasioned in consequence of the filing of the remonstrance shall be taxed as a part of the total cost of the work, as the same is taxed against the parties benefited in proportion to their benefits, and if the viewers find the proposed work not of public benefit or utility the entire cost shall be taxed against the petitioners, and collected as provided in section thirteen of this act.

Sec. 15. Upon the filing of the report of the reviewers, the board of commissioners shall, if they find such report made in accordance with the provisions of this act, established the same as described in the report of the reviewers as they find the same sustained, corrected, or changed in the port of the reviewers.

Sec. 16. Whenever the board of county commissioners establish a public ditch, drain or water course, they shall order the reviewers, if the same is established without remonstrance according to the viewers' report, or the reviewers if same is established according to their report, to meet at a time and place specified, after the lapse of ten days, and make a final report, in which they shall specify the time in which each share or allotment of the ditch shall be constructed and completed, and they shall apportion the cost of the location thereof, including printer's fees, damages, if any shall have been allowed, and compensation to the laborers who assisted the viewers in marking out the ditch, and award to each person or persons or corporation owning the lands assessed for the construction of said work their proportionate share of said cost, and shall specify the time in which such costs and expenses shall be paid to the county treasurer, and file their report with the auditor after having suscribed and sworn to the same. And it shall be the duty of the viewers and reviewers to file with their reports an account of the names of the laborers and the time each was employed by them. And all compensation and damages allowed by this section shall be collected by the treasurer as the other taxes are collected, and the compensation paid out, when collected, on an order from the auditor to the parties entitled thereto, and the damages when collected, shall be placed into the county fund to compensate the county for the damages previously paid as required by section 10 of this act.

Sec. 17. Any person or corporation aggrieved thereby may appeal from any final order or judgment of the board of commissioners made in the proceedings and entered upon their record, determining either of the following matters, viz.: 1. Whether said ditch will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare. 2. Whether the route thereof is practicable. 3. Whether the assessments made for the construction of the ditch are in proportion to the benefits to be derived therefrom. 4. The amount of damages allowed to any person or persons or corporation. And the appellant shall file with the auditor an appeal bond, with at least two freehold sureties, to be approved by the auditor and the clerk of the district court, conditioned when collected on an order that he will duly prosecute such appeal, and pay all costs that may be adjudged against him in the district court. Provided, that such appeal bond shall be filed within thirty days after such final order or judgment of the board of commissioners is made, and after the lapse of such thirty days no appeal can be taken. And if an appeal be taken, the auditor shall withhold his notices to the viewers or reviewers to make their final report; and he shall, within twenty days after the appeal bond is filed, make a complete transcript of the proceedings had before the board of commissioners, and of such appeal bond, and certify the same, together with all the papers filed in his office pertaing to such proposed work, to the clerk of district court.

Sec. 18. If more than one party appeal, the judge of the district court shall order the cases to be consolidated and tried together, and the rights of each party shall be separately determined by the jury in its verdict.

Sec. 19. As soon as the final report of the viewers or reviewers is filed, the auditor shall sell the jobs of digging and constructing each share or allotment separately, of the entire work. And he shall give notice for three consecutive weeks, by posting three written copies of such notice in three public places in the vicinity of the proposed work, and one at the door of the court house in said county, of the time when and place where he will sell to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, each and every share or allotment thereof, commencing at the one including the outlet, and thence in succession up stream to the one including the source. And no bid shall be entertained which exceeds more than twenty per cent. over and above the estimated cost of the construction in any case. And the auditor shall contract with the party to whom a share or allotment is sold, requiring him to construct such share or allotment in the time and manner set forth in the report of the viewers or reviewers on which the ditch is established, and shall take from him a bond, with two freehold sureties, payable to the state, for not less than double the amount for which the same is sold, to be by him approved, conditioned that he will faithfully perform and fulfill his contract and pay all damages which may accrue by reason of the failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract therefor.

Sec. 20. A job not completed within the time fixed in the contract and bond shall be resold by the auditor to the lowest responsible bidder, but shall not be sold for a sum exceeding twenty per cent. of the estimated value of such work, nor a second time to the same party. A contract and bond shall be entered into as hereinbefore provided; but the auditor may, for a good cause shown, give further time to any contractor, not exceeding sixty days. The auditor shall fix a time for the completion of work resold, not exceeding sixty days from the date of the bond; and no contractor shall be prosecuted on his bond until the section below is completed.

Sec. 21. It shall be the duty of the county surveyor, on being notified by any contractor that his job is completed, to inspect the same, and if he find that it is completed according to contract, he shall accept it, and give to the contractor a certificate of acceptance, stating that said job, share or allotment is completed according to the specifications of said ditch; and if any share or allotment has been sold to a person not the owner of the land assessed therefor, he shall, in addition, state the amount due the contractor for constructing the same from the owner of said the land, which certificate shall be a lien upon the land assessed for such share or allotment, and shall be due and payable immediately by the owner of the land, such certificate, if not paid on demand, shall draw interest until paid. And if the allotment sold belongs to a non-resident of the county, the auditor shall state such fact when he offers it for sale, and when the county surveyor accepts it and issues his certificate of acceptance, he shall file with the county auditor a copy thereof, whereupon said auditor shall charge the amount mentioned in said certificate on the tax duplicate against the land assessed with such allotment, to be collected as other taxes are collected, together with six per cent. for the holder of the certificate after the same becomes delinquent, and when collected it shall be paid to the person holding the certificate on an order of the auditor.

Sec. 22. Every person or corporation through whose lands any public ditch is constructed shall be required to keep the same open, free and clear of all obstructions upon his or its premises, by him or it placed thereon, and in case of a failure to do so, shall be liable to pay all reasonable and necessary expenses of removing such obstruction. A person or corporation aggrieved by any such obstruction may make a sworn statement of the facts to the county surveyor, who shall proceed to examine the premises and inquire into the truth of the statement, and if he finds the statement to be true he shall immediately notify the owner of the land on which such obstruction exists to remove the same within a reasenable time, not exceeding twenty days, and if the owners so notified fail to remove the obstruction, the surveyor shall at once cause the same to be removed at the expense of such owner, and certify such expense to the county auditor, who shall place the same, together with all fees and other expenses in the case, on the tax duplicate as an assessment upon the lands of such person or corporation, and the same shall be a lien free from obstructions, so as to answer its purpose, and pay for the same out of the general township fund; and to raise the necessary money to reimburse that fund he shall apportion and assess the costs thereof upon the lands which will be benefited by such repairs or removal of obstructions according to such benefits, in their judgment. They shall make a statement of such assessment and deliver the same to the auditor of the county, who shall put the same upon the succeeding tax duplicates, and it shall be a lien upon the lands and be collected in the same manner as State and county taxes. The provisions of this section shall also apply to all works constructed for the purpose of drainage under any law now or heretofore in force in this State. If they shall be of the opinion that such assessment, or any part thereof, ought to be charged to lands in other townships, the supervisors thereof shall, on request, meet with them at a time and place by him appointed, and they shall jointly make such assessments and certificates to the auditor of the proper counties. A majority of such supervisors as attend any such meeting shall have power to act and decide any question, and to make the assessments and certificates, and upon failure of any township supervisor to perform the work required of him by this section, after ten days' notice in writing to him by any person interested, he shall be liable, with his sureties on his official bond, for all damages caused by such failure to perform his duty, to be recovered by the person or persons so damaged. He shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars.

Sec. 24. Whenever the route of a proposed ditch drain or water course extends into two or more counties, the petition shall be signed by one or more of the land owners in each county, whose land will be liable to be assessed for the construction of such ditch, and filed with the auditor of the county containing the head or source of the proposed ditch, at least ten days before any regular meeting of the board of commissioners, and thereupon the auditor of such county shall transcribe and transmit to the auditor of each other county interested, a certified copy of such petition. And it shall be the duty of the board of commissioners of each county interested in the proposed work, at their first regular session after such petition is filed, to appoint three disinterested resident freeholders of their respective counties, as viewers, in like manner as provided for the appointment of viewers on a ditch in but one county, to meet and act conjointly, at such time and place as the board as commissioners of the county where the petition is filed may designate; and such joint viewers shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as provided in this act for the viewers on a ditch in one county; and they shall file a report of their proceedings with the auditor of each of the counties interested, at least four weeks before the next regular session of the board of commissioners, whereupon the auditor of each county shall give notice for three consecutive weeks in the manner provided for ditches in but one county, of the pendency of such petition, and the time set for the hearing thereof.

Sec. 25. The board of commissioners of the counties interested in a joint ditch shall, at the time set for the hearing of said petition, proceed to establish the same in the manner specified for ditches in but one county and in all matters pertaining to such joint ditch, the boards of commissioners shall act in the same manner, so far as practicable, as required by this act for establishing ditches in but one county, and they shall act conjointly. And when such ditch is established, the viewers shall be notified, as before provided in this act, to make their final report, and upon the filing of such final report the shares or allotments of such ditch shall be sold and constructed as hereinbefore provided for ditches in but one county, except that the auditors of the counties interested shall act together as one body in performing their duties.

Sec. 26. Such joint ditch shall be cleaned and repaired or enlarged in like manner as for ditches in but one county, by the joint action of the public officers of the counties interested.

Sec. 27. It shall be lawful for any person or corporation affected by a proposed ditch extending into more than one county to file a remonstrance with the auditor of the county in which he resides, at least five days before the regular meeting of the board of county commissioners, when the petition is to be heard and when such remonstrance has been filed and a bond for costs, as provided for ditches in but one county, the auditor shall immediately transmit a copy of such remonstrance and bond to the auditors of the other counties interested, and then, in like manner as hereinbefore provided, the boards of commissioners shall appoint reviewers who shall meet and act together and perform their duties as provided for reviewers in one county, and file a report of their proceedings with their respective boards of commissioners at or before their next regular meetings, and upon the filing of such report the boards shall, if the reviewers report the proposed work of public benefit or utility, establish the same, and it shall be constructed, cleaned, and repaired or enlarged by the joint action of the proper officers in the different counties, as though it had been established on the report of the viewers and without remonstrance. And it shall be the duty of the auditor of the county in which the time and place for the meeting of viewers or reviewers is fixed to notify the auditor of the other counties interested of such time and place for the joint viewers or reviewers to meet.

Sec. 28. When any ditch established under this act drains, either in whole or in part, any public or corporate road or railroad, or benefits any of such roads so that the road bed or traveled track of any such road will be made better by the construction of such ditch, the viewers or reviewers shall apportion to the county if a county or state road, to the company if a corporate road or railroad, such portion of the costs and expenses thereof as to private individuals, and require them to pay said costs, and perform said labor in like manner as individuals.

Sec. 29. If any person shall willfully obstruct any public ditch, or shall willfully divert the water from its proper channel, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than $5 nor more than $50, and shall also be liable for any and all damages accruing to any person or persons or corporation by such act.

Sec. 30. The orders issued by the auditor to viewers and reviewers shall be served by the sheriff, and shall be paid by the county for such services the same fees as he is allowed by law for similar services.

Sec. 31. The surveyor and engineer shall be allowed the sum of $4 per day for every day he is necessarily engaged in performing the duties required of him by this act, which sum shall be paid to him quarter-annually out of the county treasury, upon his filing before the board of commissioners an itemized account of his services, verified by his oath, and the cost of publishing the notices of jobs to be let by the auditor, and of all blanks and stationery required by him in the performance of his duties shall be paid by the county. The viewers and reviewers shall each be allowed $2 per day for each and every day they are necessarily engaged in viewing and reviewing ditches and making up and filing their reports, which sum shall be paid to them out of the county treasury. Each chainman, axman, rodman and all other hands necessary to the prompt execution of the work of locating a public ditch shall be allowed $1.50 per day for the time actually employed, to be paid as hereinbefore provided.

Sec. 32. A majority of the viewers or reviewers shall be competent to perform the duties required of them by this act, provided that the ditches extending into more than one county, there shall be present and acting a majority from each county interested.

Sec. 33. The terms "regular session" and "regular meeting" of the board of commissioners, as used in this act, shall be held to include only the regular sessions of such board, commencing on the first Tuesday of January and on the fourth Monday of July in each year; and the word "ditch," as used in this act, shall be held to include a drain or water course, and the petition for any public ditch may include any side, lateral spur or branch ditch necessary to secure the object of the improvement.

Sec. 34. The amount of assessments made by the viewers and confirmed by the board of commissioners shall be a lien upon the lands so assessed from the date of the order of the board of commissioners establishing the ditch, drain or water course, and such order, together with the report of the viewers on which the ditch is established shall be notice to all the world of the existence of such lien, and this act shall be liberally construed to promote the drainage and reclamation of wet or overflowed lands, and amounts due to contractors holding the viewers' certificate of acceptance, shall not be defeated by reason of any defect in the proceedings occurring prior to the order of the board of commissioners establishing the ditch, but such order or judgment of the said board shall be conclusive that all prior proceedings were regular and according to law.

Sec. 35. All acts and parts of acts conflicting with this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 36. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Approved March 1, 1883.
